

CHAPTER 1 INTRODUCTION TO TAXATION

WHAT IS TAXATION?

Taxation may be defined as a State power, a legislative process, and a mode of government cost-distribution.

1. As a state power - Taxation is an inherent power of the State to enforce a proportional contribution from its subjects for public purpose.
2. As a process - Taxation is a process of levying taxes by the legislature of the State to enforce proportional contributions from its subjects for public purpose.
3. As a mode of cost distribution
Taxation is a mode by which the State allocates its costs or burden to its subjects who are benefited by its spending.

The Theory of Taxation

Every government provides a vast array of public services including defense, public order and safety, health, education, and social protection among others.

A system of government is indispensable to every society. Without it, the people will not enjoy the benefits of a civilized and orderly society. However, a government cannot exist without a system of funding. The government's necessity for funding is the theory of taxation.

The Basis of Taxation

The government provides benefits to the people in the form of public services, and the people provide the funds that finance the government. This mutuality of support between the people and the government is referred to as the basis of taxation.

This mutuality is illustrated as follows:

Public services
Government
People
Taxes

Receipt of benefits is conclusively presumed

Every citizen and resident of the State directly or indirectly benefits from the public services rendered by the government. These benefits can be in the form of daily free usage of public infrastructures, access to public health or educational services, the protection and security of person and property, or simply the comfort of living in a civilized and peaceful society which is maintained by the government. While most public services are received indirectly, their realization by every citizen and resident is undeniable. In taxation, the receipt of these benefits by the people is conclusively presumed. Thus, taxpayers cannot avoid payment of taxes under the defense of absence of benefit received. The direct receipt or actual avowment of government services is not a precondition to taxation.

THEORIES OF COST ALLOCATION

Taxation is a mode of allocating government costs or burden to the people. In distributing the costs or burden, the government regards the following general considerations in the exercise of its taxation power:

1. Benefit received theory
2. Ability to pay theory

Benefit received theory

The benefit received theory presupposes that the more benefit one receives from the government, the more taxes he should pay.

Ability to pay theory

The ability to pay theory presupposes that taxation should also consider the taxpayer's ability to pay. Taxpayers should be required to contribute based on their relative capacity to contribute for the support of the government.

* In short, those who have more should be taxed more even if they benefit less from the government. Those who have less shall contribute less even if they receive more of the benefits from the government.

Aspects of the Ability to Pay Theory

1. Vertical equity

Vertical equity proposes that the extent of one's ability to pay is directly proportional to the level of his tax base.

2. Horizontal equity

Horizontal equity requires consideration of the particular circumstance of the taxpayer.

Vertical equity is a gross concept while horizontal equity is a net concept.

The Lifesblood Doctrine

Taxes are essential and indispensable to the continued subsistence of the government. Without taxes, the government would be paralyzed for lack of motive power to activate or operate it. (Citizens vs. Algue)

Taxes are the lifblood of the government, and their prompt and certain availability are an imperative need. Upon taxation depends the government's ability to serve the people for whose benefit taxes are collected. (Vera vs. Fernandez)

Implication of the Lifesblood doctrine in taxation

1. Tax is imposed even in the absence of a Constitutional grant.
2. Claims for tax exemption are construed against taxpayers.
3. The government reserves the right to choose the objects of taxation.
4. The courts are not allowed to interfere with the collection of taxes. - DSR
5. In income taxation:
 - a. Income received in advance is taxable upon receipt.
 - b. Deduction for capital expenditures and prepayments is not allowed as it effectively defers the collection of income tax.
 - c. Lesser amount of deduction is preferred when a claimable expense is subject to limit.
 - d. A higher tax base is preferred when the tax object has multiple tax bases.

INHERENT POWERS OF THE STATE

A government has its basic needs and rights which co-exist with its creation. It has rights to sustenance, protection, and properties. The government sustains itself by the power of taxation, secures itself and the well-being of its people by police power, and secures its own properties to carry out its public services by the power of eminent domain.

These rights, dubbed as "powers" are natural, inseparable, and inherent to every government. No government can sustain or effectively operate without these powers. Therefore, the exercise of these powers by the government is presumed authorized and acknowledged by the people from the very moment they establish their government. These powers are naturally exercisable by the government even in the absence of an express grant of power in the Constitution.
