

INTRODUCTION

Reading and writing Arabic

Arabic writing seems daunting at first sight, but it doesn't have to be. This book attempts to take the mystique out of it. You learn the alphabet in stages, practising each new letter or combination of letters many times before moving on to the next; at the same time you fit the letters into useful words and phrases seen everywhere in any Arab environment. This book is actual; you learn to read and write today's Arabic. And you learn through practice, from the start. That said, nobody can promise that when you have finished this book you'll be able to read a newspaper article, or write a report. That requires a knowledge of Arabic grammar going beyond our immediate scope. But you will be able to read and understand important signs and directions - even better, you will know what sort of words to expect. You will also be able to read and understand many newspaper headlines, and to write everything you can read.

The Arabic language

Arabic is a world language. It is the official language, or one of the official languages, of nineteen countries spread across Saharan Africa and most of the Middle East. It is also one of the official languages of the United Nations. Arab culture has a high reputation, and is studied at countless universities in the western world.

Words in Arabic are built on a 'root' of three (occasionally four) consonants, which contain the basic idea underlying all the words made from the root. An example is the root consisting of the three consonants k t b, which has the basic idea of writing. From this root Arabic makes:

- the verb kataba to write
- the noun kātib for writer
- maktūb for written or for letter
- kitāba for the action of writing
- maktab for office, or the place where one writes
- kitab for book
- maktaba for library or bookshop, and so on.
