Hershenzon,2006 In 1867 a roomful of men gathered in the office of a noted attorney to discuss Detroit s need for a rural cemetery They decided to form an association and invested their own money to purchase a plot of land that had once been occupied by Native Americans and then French settlers a few miles from the heart of the city They chose this heavily wooded area because it offered many acres of land that could accommodate the growing need for more burial space and it became the cornerstone of one of the city s oldest and most historic cemeteries Woodmere Cemetery Cemetery acreage has been bought and sold and buildings on the grounds have been raised and later razed Funeral procedures have changed as well as cemetery ownership Still Woodmere has remained one of Detroit s most beautiful treasures where visitors can take a historical step back into time From the very rich to the very poor many thousands have chosen Woodmere Cemetery to be their final resting place Through archival images Detroit s Woodmere Cemetery takes a look at the movers and shakers of

Producing Hegemony Mark Rupert, 1995-02-24 In this book Mark Rupert argues that American global power was shaped by the ways in which mass production was institutionalized in the USA and by the political and ideological struggles integral to this process The production of an unprecedented volume of goods propelled the United States to the apex of the global division of labor ensuring victory in World War II and enabling postwar reconstruction under American leadership He describes an historic bloc of American statesmen capitalists and labor leaders who fostered a productivity oriented political consensus within the USA and sought to generalize their vision of liberal capitalism around the globe He focuses on the incorporation of industrial labor as a junior partner in this hegemonic bloc and argues that the recent erosion of its position under the pressures of transnational competition and the political forces of right wing reaction may open up new possibilities for transformative politics
