

The Age of Bluff

By the time the 1990s rolled around, the bluff was a staple of the American political scene. In 1992, Bill Clinton, then a governor of Arkansas, was elected president of the United States. Clinton's campaign was a masterclass in bluffing. He had no experience in the White House, but he had a reputation for being a "tough guy" who could handle the job. He also had a knack for making bold promises that he often failed to deliver on.

Clinton's bluffing was not limited to his campaign. During his presidency, he often made promises that he did not intend to keep. For example, he promised to "bring the troops home" from Somalia, but he never did. He also promised to "bring the troops home" from Bosnia, but he never did. Clinton's bluffing was a key part of his success as a politician.

Clinton's bluffing was not limited to his presidency. He continued to bluff throughout his career. In 1998, he was re-elected president, despite the fact that he had no experience in the White House. He was able to do this because he had a reputation for being a "tough guy" who could handle the job. He also had a knack for making bold promises that he often failed to deliver on.

Nayar,2018-10-29 This book foregrounds the pressures that three transformative technologies in the long sixteenth century the printing press gunpowder and the magnetic compass placed on long held literary practices as well as on cultural and social structures Sheila J Nayar disinters the clash between humanist drives and print culture places the rise of gunpowder warfare beside the equivalent rise in chivalric romance and illustrates fraught attempts by humanists to hold on to classicist traditions in the face of seismic changes in navigation. Lively and engaging, this study illuminates not only how literature responded to radical technological changes but also how literature was sometimes forced through unanticipated destabilizations to reimagine itself. By tracing the early modern humanist interanimation with print, powder, and compass, Nayar exposes how these technologies assisted in producing new ways of seeing, knowing, and being in the world.
