Aqueous Two-Phase Systems Rajni Hatti-Kaul, 2008-02-05 A mixture of two polymers or one polymer and a salt in an aqueous medium separates into two phases; this phenomenon is useful in biotechnology for product separations. Separation of biological molecules and particles in these aqueous two-phase systems (ATPS) was initiated over 40 years ago by P. Albertsson and later proved to be of immense utility in biochemical and cell biological research. A boost in the application of ATPS was seen when problems of separations in biotechnology processes were encountered. Its simplicity, biocompatibility, and amenability to easy scale-up operations make the use of ATPS very attractive for large-scale bioseparations. Despite the advantages ATPS enjoys over other separation techniques, the application of two-phase systems has for a long time been confined to selected laboratories. Recent years have, however, shown a trend in which increasing numbers of researchers employ two-phase partitioning techniques in both basic and applied research.

Assembly of the Photosystem II Membrane-Protein Complex of Oxygenic Photosynthesis Julian J. Eaton-Rye, Roman Sobotka, 2017-08-08 Photosystem II is a 700 kDa membrane protein supercomplex responsible for the light-driven splitting of water in oxygenic photosynthesis. The photosystem is comprised of two 350 kDa complexes, each made of 20 different polypeptides and over 80 cofactors. While there have been major advances in understanding the mature structure of this photosystem, many key protein factors involved in the assembly of the complex do not appear in the holoenzyme. The mechanism for assembling this supercomplex is a very active area of research, with newly discovered assembly factors and subcomplexes requiring characterization. Additionally, the ability to split water is inseparable from light-induced photodamage that arises from radicals and reactive O₂ species generated by Photosystem II chemistry. Consequently, to sustain water splitting, a self-repair cycle has evolved whereby damaged protein is removed and replaced so as to extend the working life of the complex. Understanding how the biogenesis and repair processes are coordinated is among several important questions that remain to be answered. Other questions include how and when are the inorganic cofactors inserted during the assembly and repair processes and how are the subcomplexes protected from photodamage during assembly Evidence has also been obtained for Photosystem II biogenesis centers in cyanobacteria but do these also exist in plants Do the molecular mechanisms associated with Photosystem II assembly shed fresh light on the assembly of other major energy transducing complexes such as Photosystem I or the cytochrome b6 f complex or indeed other respiratory complexes The contributions to this Frontiers in Plant Science Research Topic are likely to reveal new details applicable to the assembly of a range of membrane protein complexes including aspects of self assembly and solar energy conversion that may be applied to artificial photosynthetic systems In addition a deeper understanding of Photosystem II assembly particularly in response to changing environmental conditions will provide new knowledge underpinning photosynthetic yields which may contribute to improved food production and long term food security
