

Ethical Problems of Abortion*

This paper falls into three distinct sections. In the first I will resume briefly the position of the Roman Catholic Church and of the other churches in their official statements and current theological opinion. It will help to set these positions in their historical and christian context. The second section will seek to isolate the immediate key and controverted issues in this ethical and christian tradition. The third and final section will consider some of the wider issues involved in discussing ethical problems of abortion. In this way it is hoped to set the discussion in its total framework.

I. THE CHRISTIAN POSITION ON ABORTION

Two reservations are in order here. I obviously cannot in the space available give a comprehensive account of all the positions held by Christians, past and present. In fact I will be mainly concerned with the position of my own church, the Roman Catholic as it is the one I know best. However, I consider it helpful to include here some account of non-Roman positions, at least, as further examples of how the common tradition has developed.

The second reservation concerns the propriety of considering abortion in Christian terms at all. It might seem that the title 'Ethical Problems of Abortion', suggests a non-religious approach and that this would be the only profitable one in our post-christian world. As a matter of history the Christian tradition provides the most considerable body of thought on the subject. As a way into the discussion, which should not of course obscure ethical analysis by religious authority or sentiment, the Christian position is invaluable. Any particular statement of it may not be regarded as preventing further discussion but as a stimulus to it.

(a) THE CHRISTIAN CHURCHES TODAY

(i) Roman Catholic Position

The present official position in the Roman Catholic Church was clearly and firmly laid down in the encyclical Casti Connubii of Pius IX in 1930,¹ reinforced by Pius XII in his Address to the Italian Catholic
