

The European Union provides a multilevel system for the protection of fundamental rights.

The European Union (EU) is a distinctive supranational organization that is distinguished not only by its economic and political integration but also by its dedication to the defense of fundamental rights. This commitment's sophisticated multilevel framework, which is intended to protect fundamental rights throughout its member nations, is at its core. The European Court of Justice (ECJ) interprets and upholds this system in a dynamic manner. It is supported by a strong legal framework created by several EU Treaties, including the Treaty on European Union (TEU) and the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union (TFEU). The jurisprudence of the European Court of Justice (ECJ) is crucial in determining the state of fundamental rights in the European Union, frequently impacting national laws and judicial procedures.

The cornerstone of the European Union's legal system, the treaties form the legal basis for the protection of fundamental rights inside the EU. The foundation for a uniform approach to basic rights amongst member states is laid by the Treaties on European Union (TEU) and the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union (TFEU). These treaties have gradually reinforced the EU's commitment to fundamental rights, particularly through its revisions like the Lisbon Treaty. The Lisbon Treaty's binding adoption of the Charter of Fundamental Rights represents a critical turning point in this process. The Charter is a comprehensive text that unifies a number of rights that were previously dispersed over many laws. It encompasses social, political, economic, and civil rights and upholds values like justice, equality, solidarity, liberties, and dignity for all people. To illustrate the EU's commitment to non-discrimination, consider Article 21 of the Charter, which forbids discrimination on any grounds, including sex, race, color, ethnic or social origin, genetic features, language, religion or belief, political or any other opinion, membership of a national minority, property, birth, disability, age, or sexual orientation. By guaranteeing a consistent implementation of rights across the Union, these treaties give the European Union the authority to take action against member states that transgress these essential values. Furthermore, these accords established the idea of EU law's primacy, which states that EU law takes precedence over national law in cases of disagreement. This principle is essential
