

THE EVALUATION OF CULTURAL ACTION*

BEATRICE AVALOS

Department of Education, University College Cardiff,

During the last twenty years in South America there has developed a whole array of educational projects which in the international jargon of education are described as non-formal adult education programmes. Their significance, however, goes beyond that of being mere instances of adult training programmes in that their concern is to empower the poorest groups in the population both in terms of their cultural and of their political development. They are programas de educación popular (García-Huidobro, 1982) intended for those groups who have the least possibilities of participating meaningfully in mainstream society, be these the rural peasantry or the city's sub-proletariat, the wage-earning or the self- or un-employed proletariat. The origins of these programmes can be traced back to Church-related initiatives or to individuals in the educated middle-classes, who have developed awareness and concern for the indigent conditions in which many of their country-people live. They are also related to the socio-political characteristics of a number of the South American countries in the sixties and seventies. When extensive land reforms were carried out (such as those in Bolivia after 1952 and Chile after 1964) there was a need for educational programmes geared to the understanding of the new land ownership structure and to the acquisition of skills needed to achieve rural development targets. The later installation of military dictatorships (from Brazil in 1964 to Chile, Uruguay, Argentina and Bolivia in the seventies) together with their monetarist economic policies brought about a deterioration in the living conditions of the poor. The urban proletariat saw its material needs increase while the space for negotiation with employers became more and more restricted to the point that the struggle to remain alive began to take precedence over all other things. A similar situation was lived by the rural poor aggravated by the fact that they began to lose what land they had come to possess, being once again at the mercy of the agricultural employer. In this context 'popular education' activities re-emerged not as before with the purpose of sustaining structural reforms (as the case had been with the land reform or the nationalisation of industries in Chile), but to develop grass-root organisations. Such organisations could be seen as a means of solving immediate subsistence problems, of enabling the poor to comprehend events and to renew confidence in their own ability and acknowledge their dignity as human beings. García Huidobro (1982, p. 32) in reviewing the characteristics of some fifteen projects of this type, describes them as follows:

they begin by being centred on concrete actions to solve efficiently pressing problems (work, health, living arrangements, parent-child relationships, food, recreation...); access is placed on participatory means and on democratic internal relationships leading to a progressive autonomy of their actions with regard to institutions that have sponsored the project; the attempt is to stimulate through these activities the analysis and understanding of the situation or lived as well as the group's perception of its capabilities and collective identity. In order to achieve this purpose, there often is an emphasis placed on the retrieval and further development of the group's popular culture.

Symbolic Action Theory and Cultural Psychology Ernest E. Boesch, 2012-12-06 Gustav Jahoda University of Strathclyde Ever since psychology emerged as a separate discipline about a century ago there have been differing views as to what it is or ought to be Some like Ebbinghaus saw it as a budding natural science experimental and quantitative Others like Dilthey regarded psychology in the main as a humane field of study historical and interpretative in character The dichotomy of explaining versus understanding has been a subject of debate ever since Regrettably most of the protagonists of these respective positions tend to view them as mutually exclusive in spite of the fact that already Wundt had stressed that hard experimental and soft Volkerpsychologie are both equally important For the major part of the present century the field has been largely dominated by advocates of hard nosed scientific approaches typified first by Behaviorism and latterly cognitive psychology which concentrates on central processes involved in cognition Without in any way wishing to denigrate the undoubted achievements of cognitive psychology it has its limitations that are epitomized by T H Huxley's dictum The great end of life is not knowledge but action This might well serve as the motto for the action theory of Ernest Boesch who is one of several prominent psychologists out of harmony with the prevailing ethos They travel under different banners such as social constructivism ethogenics or hermeneutics but all share reservations about what many feel is the arid scientism of the mainstream

Cultural Policy in the Polder Edwin Meerkerk, Quirijn Lennert Hoogen, 2025-10-01 At the occasion of the 25 anniversary of the Dutch Cultural Policy Act Dutch academics in cultural policy research have compiled a volume to commemorate the quarter century in which Dutch cultural policy has developed and analyse the key debates in Dutch cultural policy for the coming years Historically central public authority in the Netherlands has been problematic The country's origin as a confederation of seven independent republics has had effect in the sense that government usually works bottom up As a result the Netherlands has relatively few national cultural institutions when compared to other countries Moreover the national media never have been linked to the nation state It is therefore surprising that the nation's cultural policy can be described as a national system in which the nation state sets the agenda rather than cities and regions
