Art and the Platonic Matrix Jürgen Lawrenz, 2011-05-25 For two millennia philosophy has restlessly stalked a fundamental problem the answer to the question what is art really Aesthetic discourse focused on the Platonic Matrix of truth and beauty arthood and object imitation and representation form and idea has not delivered on its promise leaving us in bewilderment over principles that are either ignored or contradicted by the arts themselves In this searching critique some astonishing faux pas are brought to light Notably that aesthetics makes do without a knower the heuristics of art and the dynamics of self exploration that are central to the aesthetic experience What this book seeks to accomplish is a thorough reformulation of the terms of reference based on the actual form of life that is art This amounts to a framework for a wholly new philosophy of art It demonstrates that art is quintessentially involved in the meaning of life and through its heuristic dimension serves our impulse for self knowledge and an understanding of the human condition The book is in the first instance a philosophical treatise and therefore suitable for academic study in all grades though perhaps with greatest benefit at post graduate level But it has been written in an approachable style to encourage a wider audience to engage with its tenets accordingly it seeks also to address art aficionados whether professional or dilettante as well as general readers with an interest in these ever perplexing and profoundly intriguing issues of our human estate

Retelling Stories, Framing Culture John Stephens, Robyn McCallum, 2013-01-11 What happens to traditional stories when they are retold in another time and cultural context and for a different audience This first of its kind study discusses Bible stories classical myths heroic legends Arthurian romances Robin Hood lore folk tales oriental tales and other stories derived from European cultures One chapter is devoted to various retellings of classics from Shakespeare to Wind in the Willows The authors offer a general theory of what motivates the retelling of stories and how stories express the aspirations of a society An important function of stories is to introduce children to a cultural heritage and to transmit a body of shared allusions and experiences that expresses a society's central values and assumptions However the cultural heritage may be modified through a pervasive tendency of retellings to produce socially conservative outcomes because of ethnocentric androcentric and class based assumptions in the source stories that persist into retellings Therefore some stories such as classical myths are particularly resistant to feminist reinterpretations for example while other types such as folktales are more malleable In examining such possibilities the book evaluates the processes of interpretation apparent in retellings Index included
