

African Publishers' Associations on the Web: An Inventory and Directory

Back in June 2019 the International Publishers Association (IPA) stated¹ that 40 African publishers' associations had gathered ahead of a two-day IPA seminar in Nairobi, as the International Publishers Association signed a Memoranda of Understanding with the African Publishers Network and the Association for the Development of Education in Africa to formalise the IPA's commitment to the region. "Straight after the signing", the report said, "the three organizations took advantage of the presence of the heads of 40 African publishers' associations to set out the first steps of the newly formalised partnerships."

This is a welcome development, especially as it has been generally recognized that book professional associations are still weak in many African countries, often due to lack of resources and skills. Several are dormant, inaccessible, or carry little clout, while others seem to have ceased activities altogether. They are very much in need of new energy, and new vision.

Publishers' associations websites – The current situation

The current situation presents a rather dismal picture. The website of the African Publishers Network (APNET)² lists a total of 44 national publishers/book trade associations with 'Full membership' status, plus three more 'Prospective members'. However, it is only able to provide links to websites for just eight of them (those in Algeria, the Côte d'Ivoire, Egypt, Ghana, Kenya, Malawi, Nigeria, Senegal, and South Africa), while three more links (Uganda, Tanzania, and Zimbabwe) are merely links to postal addresses rather than websites. Additionally, I have been able to track down websites of publishers' and book trade organizations in five more countries, namely those in Algeria, Madagascar, Mali, Rwanda, and Tunisia. However, three of those are not accessible at this time (March 2021), while some others have been down for months, or years, or have been taken down permanently.
