

Difference Between

Federal Courts

In the United States, federal courts are those courts that have limited jurisdiction. They can only hear cases authorized by the Constitution or federal statutes. They are courts established by the federal government and have jurisdiction over questions of federal law.

State Courts

The state courts handle a large number of cases and maintain more contact with the public. On the other side, federal courts hear a few cases mostly those that have national importance. Let us discuss the difference between federal and state courts in detail.
