Norton Grapevine Canopy Management Effects on Fruit and Wine Staci N. Bass,2011 Because of their dense nature Norton grapevine canopies can prevent much sunlight from reaching the fruit clusters so various degrees of canopy manipulation were implemented on Norton grapevines at Mountain Grove Missouri This experiment opened the canopy in attempts to improve both fruit and wine quality by allowing more sunlight to reach the clusters Treatments included an unmanaged control shoot positioning removal of primary leaves directly surrounding the grape clusters removal of primary leaves and secondary shoots surrounding the clusters and removal of primary leaves and secondary shoots around the clusters on the north side of the canopy only Interior canopy light leaf layers and foliage removed were measured and analyzed The canopy was significantly opened with more severe manipulation Yield showed no significant differences among treatments but increased slightly with increased defoliation Analyses on the juice showed significantly lower values for pH and titratable acidity in the most severely defoliated treatment Shoot positioning and primary leaf removal caused an increase in total soluble solids The unmanaged control and most severely defoliated treatment were processed into wine and although there were no significant differences the trend was toward decreases in pH and potassium and increases in total anthocyanin canopy manipulation significantly increased the amount of sunlight that could reach the cluster and showed some improvement in fruit composition and red wine components Grape Culture and Wine-making in California

George Charles Husmann,1888 Practical Field Guide to Grapegrowing and Vine Physiology Daniel Schuster,Laura Bernini ,Andrea Paoletti,2018-10-01 Written as both an examination of applied theory of grapegrowing and a handy manual for the working viticulturist the Practical Field Guide to Grapegrowing and Vine Physiology serves as a necessary compliment to all the processes of modern viticulture in the variety of climates where grapes are grown Organized by growing cycles the Field Guide gives detailed prescriptions for managing each season s unique processes such as Winter vine dormancy root growth canopy training different root stocks identifying various pathogens and bacteria Spring bud burst flower cluster development canopy construction Summer berry growth through veraison respiration rate water and nitrogen usage phenolic metabolism vigor control irrigation and dry farming Autumn yield estimates harvest mechanical vs hand harvesting post harvest vine management Also included are detailed studies on proper grapevine adaption to specific sites and different agricultural systems such as industrial organic sustainable and biodynamic The Field Guide s greatest value originates in its authors each of whom deals with vineyard management in all seasons and a great range of terroirs and the physiological interpretation for each Mario Fregoni Professor Emeritus of Viticulture University of Piacenza and Honorary President of I O V International Organization du Vin Irrigation and Canopy Management Effect on Grape and Wine Phenolic Profile in San Joaquin Valley Antonios Marinos (Graduate student),2021

Computational Canopy Models for Precision Measurement and Adaptive Management of Grapevine Performance James Matthew Meyers,2011 Effective control of winegrape fruit quality requires the simultaneous consideration of multiple response models including the relationship between the chemical profile of harvested fruit and the organoleptic qualities of a finished wine a mechanistic understanding of key flavor and aroma compound biosynthesis and the role of physical vineyard parameters in these biosynthetic processes Any attempt to predictably influence the performance of a winegrape cropping system with respect to flavor and aroma requires the ability to both measure the relevant physical parameters of that system and to accurately manipulate them to achieve a deliberate and quantitative response Although the sub discipline of precision viticulture has established that a quantitative understanding of plot scale spatial variability can guide cultural inputs toward plot scale consistency the existence and small scale spatial patterns and their effect on precision management have not been extensively studied The experiments presented here were designed to 1 improve the precision and increase the spatial resolution of commonly used viticultural research methods with the goal of identifying characterizing and quantifying small scale spatial patterns in fruiting zone of winegrape canopies 2 explore the impact of small scale spatial structure on the efficacy of common plot level cultural inputs 3 develop methods for optimizing vineyard research and commercial production operations within known parametric spatial patterns at multiple scales and 4 explore the potential application of these methods in the control of a specific sunlight sensitive compound vital to the organoleptic qualities of Riesling wine The development and application of new computational methods for managing both the data volume of high resolution models and the combinatorial complexities of multi objective vineyard optimization resulted in new quantitative metrics for describing fruit zone sunlight regimes the discovery and quantification of small scale culturally induced microclimatic spatial patterns the discovery that small scale spatial patterns can negatively impact the efficacy of plotscale cultural inputs and an enhanced understanding of the relationship between canopy microclimatic variability and concentrations of C13 norisoprenoids in Riesling grapes To date the software tools developed within the scope of dissertation have been adopted by researchers and winegrape growers in a dozen countries and 14 U S states for use in the study and optimization of crop performance and fruit metabolite profiles
