Practice John T. Pardeck, 2002-06-30 Pardeck and his contributors approach the topic of family health from a macro perspective. Family health is a holistic approach to treatment embracing aspects of family functioning not typically considered in other more traditional approaches to assessment and treatment. They place particular emphasis on the ecological context in which the family functions, including the neighborhood, community, and other larger social systems. Family health is defined as the development of and continuous interaction among the physical, mental, emotional, social, economic, cultural, and spiritual dimensions of the family that result in the holistic well-being of the family and its members. The chapters in the book are guided by a number of key premises including: a) Family health social work practice is grounded in a biopsychosocial approach to assessment and treatment; b) Family health is based in a systems ecological approach to assessment and intervention because of the role that various systems play in the well-being of the family; c) Family health views the family system as the most important system for promoting the growth and development of the person; d) Family health social work practice requires close collaboration between social work practitioners and other professionals. Based on these basic premises, Pardeck focuses on the macro-level issues of family health practice that include community intervention, policy, and program development and program administration. The book is an important resource for social work professionals, scholars, students, and other researchers involved with social work practice and human services. Social Work Practice with the Elderly Michael J. Holosko, Marvin D. Feit, 1996 Social Work Practice for Promoting Health and Wellbeing Liz Beddoe, Jane Maidment, 2013-12-17 Promoting health and wellbeing is an essential part of all effective social work, not just for practice in healthcare settings. In fact, the IFSW holds that social workers in all settings are engaged in health work, and physical and mental resilience can make a major difference to all service users' lives. Drawing on international literature and research, the authors collected here encourage thinking about the social, political, cultural, emotional, spiritual, economic, and spatial aspects of health and wellbeing and how they impact on the unique strengths and challenges of working with particular populations and communities. Divided into three parts, the first section outlines the major theoretical paradigms and critical debates around social work and ideas of wellbeing, globalisation, risk, and vulnerability and the natural environment. The second part goes on to explore how diverse understandings of culture, identity, spirituality, and health require different strategies for meeting health and wellbeing needs. The final part presents a variety of examples of social work research in relation to health and wellbeing with specific populations, including mental health. Exploring how structural inequality, oppression, and stigma can impact upon people and drawing upon a social model of health, this book is an important read for all practitioners and researchers interested in social work, public health, and social inclusion. School Social Work Services in Federally Funded Programs Hope M. Bland, Ashraf Esmail, 2012-10-08 This book identifies the barriers between social work intervention in education and government-funded programs that impact African American students. The chapters approach these issues from a child-centered perspective, which has proven critical in developing positive and sustainable relationships with African American students As children begin to understand more about their lives and the world around them they also develop opinions that help them identify who they are as individuals and where they see themselves in the world From a qualitative research methodology approach trust has been identified as a fundamental factor and potential barrier among all variables acknowledged Interviews with ten African American high school and college students were conducted to discuss their perspectives on education family life peer interaction and social work intervention
