

Multimedia Technologies and Familiar Spaces: 21st-Century Teaching for 21st-Century Learners

Abstract

This article explores 21st century skills, nonlinear thinking skills, and the need for student reflection—which, taken together, serve as an essential foundation for digital-age teaching of today's hypertext learners. The authors discuss why preservice teachers need to use multimedia technologies within the context of students' familiar, technology-rich living spaces to develop their own teaching skills and the technology skills of their students. Exemplary multimedia samples are offered as demonstrations of ways to develop essential technology-related skills in the next generation of teachers.

Today's students are immersed in a variety of technologies from a young age. As such, they have been described as "wired" or "digitized," but even these tags are outdated almost upon arrival. Prensky (2001a) called this first generation to grow up in a society immersed in technology "digital natives"—the generation that has spoken the language of technology from birth. Ironically, such familiarity and comfort with all things digital present challenges for educators who struggle to keep up with an ever-changing technology context and students who no longer process information primarily in a sequential manner.

Technologies For The 21st Century On Multimedia:

Technology in the 21st Century Toshio Itoh, Toshio Itō, Hitoshi Ogata, Teruhisa Ichikawa, 1996 Many situations we encounter in daily life force us to recognize that we already live in the age of the information oriented society We also hear future prospects for life and society discussed in terms of expected advances in information and communications technologies However in these rapidly changing technologies two weeks is a very long time and anything going back two years is almost a fossil For instance the word Internet was little used two years ago but now it attracts intense worldwide attention This makes it very difficult to read the future with any degree of confidence Generally the key to creating new products and new markets is thought to lie in fostering market oriented development Today though when it is hard to grasp changes in the market place we need to consider the case for basing our suggestions for new products and markets on readings of the future that reflect a proper understanding of the nature of technology later brushing up these suggestions with user and market oriented improvements This book adopts the latter method The book is divided into three parts In the first for technologies that promise to make great future advances current efforts and achievements are described along with the directions in which these technologies are headed In the second part of the book covers the development and production technologies that will be needed to bring new products to market Finally the third part explores systems based on these products and technologies and share our practical vision of what the advanced information oriented society will be like Readers engineers and technologists IT experts
