Assistive Technology : how to Make it More Accessible for All, 2013 Assistive Technology should be considered by all special education IEP teams for children with special education needs However many professionals and parents are not trained nor do they have the resources to adequately make decisions to help implement assistive technology for the children that need the assistance In order to improve the knowledge of professionals and parents they need to be provided with resources to help make the best decision for the student This paper discusses the current training that professionals and parents receive when their child is beginning to use different forms of assistive technology. It also has some resource lists that IEP teams can use to reference different types of assistive technologies. It is recommended that the manner in which professionals are trained to use and incorporate assistive technology is improved in teacher training programs and within school during implementation. It is also recommended that teachers become able to help with the implementation of assistive technology within their classroom in order to meet the needs of their student on IEPs.
