

Choice of Accompaniment Styles

Although each song is a complete professional arrangement in itself, there are several ways you may play it, depending on your ability and the features present on your particular organ model. Your owner's manual will help clarify the latter.

Notes and rests as indicated notes.

1 As written, without automatic features. At certain places in many songs, rests and slash marks are indicated to show you where you might play the sustained written chord in rhythm. This will add variety and interest to your playing. In these cases, play the pedal part just as it's written.

... play the chord like this.

2 As written, with automatic rhythm (drums) and automatic accompaniment (chords and bass). There are two ways to do this, depending on the capabilities of your instrument:

- Hold each chord as written on the bass staff and the organ will provide the correct rhythmic bass part automatically.
- Hold each chord as written and add the pedal indicated by the letter-name in the chord symbol box — this will provide the automatic rhythmic bass.

Suggested rhythm settings accompany all the songs in this book (except the Theatre Organ books); these are a guide to which automatic rhythm you might use.

3 Play the notes as they appear on the treble (5) staff and form your own left hand and pedal parts merely by reading the chord symbols. If you wish to use the automatic features, you must consider the organ's capabilities once again.

Sound Set-ups

Sound Set-Ups, or voice tab combinations, suggest how the controls may be adjusted to create the right mood for any song you play. There are seven categories ranging from "Soft Solo" to "Bright 'n' Brassy"; you'll see such an indication near the title of each song in this book. By referring to the Sound Set-Up Guide for your organ brand (which you should be able to get from your local dealer), it's easy to set up the organ voices and controls to achieve the most appropriate sound for any song you play.
