Jill Swango, Sally Boles Steward, 2003 Like your own personal survival guide. Help! ICOM Teaching Middle School Science is a nontechnical how to manual especially for first year teachers. But even veteran teachers can benefit from the plentiful ideas, examples and tips on teaching science the way middle schoolers learn best. The book covers all the basics: what to do on the first day of school including icebreaker activities, preparing safe and effective lab lessons, managing the classroom, working with in school teams as well as parents. But its practical and encouraging approach doesn't mean it shortchanges the basics of effective pedagogy. You'll learn how to handle cooperative learning and assessment, how to help students write effectively and the importance of modeling for early adolescents. Team-based Professional Development Judith T. Witmer, Steven A. Melnick, 2007 In this book Judith T. Witmer and Steven A. Melnick provide an overview of adult learning and its impact on professional development. The chapters provide a theoretical foundation along with practical advice on implementing team based professional development among educators within school districts which will lead to true systemic reform.

Improving Teacher Morale with Team Building, 2007 The purpose of this study is to build a conceptual framework to explain the influence of team building among elementary school teachers to improve teacher morale. This framework is intended as the foundation for a team building model to provide principals and teachers with a guide for implementing sound team building activities into inservice training and throughout the school year. What are the best practices for implementing team building and how can these practices encourage teachers to have a more positive outlook on their profession? The variables include school environment, school climate, different principals, principal changes, years of teaching experience, teaching and planning time, school populations and types of student programs at the school. This qualitative case study was conducted using interviews of administrators and teachers from 7 public elementary schools located in Southern Appalachia to discover how teambuilding activities influenced their perceptions of teacher morale. School observations captured the climate of the schools and each school's School Improvement Plan (SIP) and Staff Development Plan were examined. The researcher coded transcripts into themes patterns and the following conceptual constructs: a communication b change c building community d acknowledgement e work morale f time g team building and h teamwork. Findings confirmed that administrators and a majority of the teachers showed evidence of high morale. The administrators reported that team building activities at their school promoted open communication and a positive working environment. Ninety percent of the teachers discussed that team building brought the faculty together and improved communication and the overall climate of the school. Ten percent of the teachers interviewed came from 2 schools that had vertical team meetings during their planning time. They complained that vertical team meetings were a waste of time. For the most part team build
