

THE CONSULTANT

A NOVEL OF COMPUTER CRIME

JOHN McNEIL

CHAPTER 1

It was a dark, rainy night in the city of New York. The rain fell in heavy, slanting sheets, reflecting the city lights and creating a shimmering, chaotic pattern on the pavement. The streets were empty, save for a few late-night stragglers and the occasional taxi cab weaving through the slick surface. In the heart of the city, a lone figure stood in the shadows of a building, looking out over the vast, illuminated expanse of the metropolis. The figure was a man, his face partially obscured by the darkness and the rain. He was wearing a dark, heavy coat and a hat, and his hands were tucked into his pockets. He stood there for a long time, his gaze fixed on the distant lights of the city, as if he were searching for something, or someone, in the endless sea of light and shadow.

As the rain continued to fall, the man's thoughts began to drift. He remembered the first time he had seen the city, the way the lights reflected off the wet streets, the way the buildings seemed to reach up towards the sky. He remembered the feeling of being so small, so insignificant, in the face of such a vast and powerful force. But now, as he stood there, he felt a sense of familiarity, a sense of belonging. He knew this city, he knew its secrets, its hidden corners, its dark underbelly. He knew the way the rain fell, the way the wind whistled through the streets, the way the city lights shined. He knew it all, and he knew that he was the only one who did.

The man's gaze shifted from the city to the building he was standing in. It was a tall, dark structure, its windows mostly dark, but a few on the upper floors were lit up, casting a warm, yellow glow. The man walked towards the entrance, his footsteps echoing on the wet pavement. He opened the door and stepped inside, the rain falling behind him. The interior of the building was dark and quiet, with the only light coming from a small lamp on a table in the corner. The man walked towards the lamp, his hand reaching out to touch the shade. As he did, he felt a sudden, sharp pain in his chest, a pain that seemed to come from deep within. He gasped, his hand clutching his chest, and he fell back onto the floor. The pain was unbearable, a searing, burning pain that made him feel like he was being torn apart. He tried to get up, but his legs were numb, and he was unable to move. He lay on the floor, his eyes closed, his hands clutching his chest, as the pain continued to grow. He felt a sense of dread, a sense of impending doom, as the pain reached its peak. He knew that he was in trouble, that he was in danger, and that he was alone. He tried to call out, but his voice was hoarse and weak, and no one came. He lay there, his body trembling, as the pain continued to consume him. He felt a sense of helplessness, a sense of despair, as he realized that he was alone in the world. He knew that he was in trouble, that he was in danger, and that he was alone. He tried to call out, but his voice was hoarse and weak, and no one came. He lay there, his body trembling, as the pain continued to consume him. He felt a sense of helplessness, a sense of despair, as he realized that he was alone in the world.
