

Explaining Rural Conservatism: Political Consequences of Technological Change in the Great Plains

ADITYA DASGUPTA University of California, Merced, United States

ELENA RAMIREZ University of California, Merced, United States

Rural areas are conservative electoral strongholds in the United States and other advanced capitalist economies. But this was not always the case. What explains the rise of rural conservatism? This paper argues that technological change transformed not only agriculture but rural political preferences during the twentieth century. It studies a natural experiment: the post-World War II introduction of new irrigation technologies, which enabled farmers to irrigate otherwise arid land in the Great Plains using groundwater. Difference-in-differences analyses exploiting the shock's differential impact on counties overlying the Ogallala Aquifer—a pattern validated with remote-sensing data—show that technological change contributed significantly to the region's long-term conservative electoral transformation. Additional analyses, including comparison of individual policy preferences inside/outside the Ogallala Aquifer boundary, suggest that this was due to the rise of capital-intensive agriculture and the growing power of agribusiness. The findings demonstrate how new technologies made new politics in rural America.

INTRODUCTION

Conservative parties thrive electorally in rural areas in the US and other advanced capitalist economies (Cramer 2016; Rodden 2019). Particularly given the political overrepresentation of rural areas, the countryside is a critical source of electoral support for right-wing political parties. Yet this was not always the case historically (see, e.g., Lipset 1950; Luebbert 1987). In the case of the US, rural voters were relatively centrist in their politics and often supported left-wing politicians, like those belonging to the Populist Party, in the late nineteenth and early twentieth century.

What, then, explains the long-term transformation of rural areas into conservative electoral strongholds? In an important debate stoked by Frank's (2007) book—which asked “What’s the Matter with Kansas?”—scholars have puzzled over the growing dominance of the conservative Republican Party in poor and rural states, a phenomenon that appears to contradict canonical class-based theories of voting. Yet, closer inspection of micro-level survey data demonstrates that within these states, it is affluent individuals who are most conservative in their voting patterns (see, e.g., Bartels 2006; Gelman 2009).

Building on these debates, this paper explores the role of technological and economic change in political change in rural areas. Long-term technological change transformed American agriculture in the twentieth century with innovations ranging from the improvement of crop and animal varieties, to the refinement of fertilizers and pesticides, to various forms of mechanization, to the development of new methods for harnessing water for irrigation, especially groundwater (Anderson 2009; Olmstead and Rhode 2001; 2008; Worster 1992). Due to technological change, agricultural output quadrupled over the twentieth century in the US despite an 80% decline in labor usage (Pardey and Alston 2021).

Long-term technological change made agriculture more productive but also more capital-intensive, generating economies of scale that resulted in the winnowing of unproductive and precarious family farms, and their replacement by highly productive, business-like farms as well as the spatial agglomeration of agricultural industries—known jointly as agribusiness—which benefit from conservative economic policies, including limited government regulation and pro-business tax and spending policies. The growing economic and political power of agribusiness interests in rural areas has, this paper argues, played an important role in the long-term conservative transformation of rural political preferences and the growing electoral success of the Republican Party in rural areas.

To test the argument, this paper exploits a historical natural experiment in the American Great Plains: the post-war introduction of new irrigation technologies, which enabled farmers to irrigate otherwise arid land—but only in areas with access to groundwater. Without irrigation, the arid climate of the Great Plains is suitable to be found in this book are drawn from the European Community Eastern Europe Scandinavia North America and elsewhere Inevitably as the book was to be published in English most of the editorial work has been undertaken at the Centre for Urban and Regional Development Studies at Newcastle University In so doing we have attempted to standardize the English as far as possible whilst trying not to lose the characteristics of the styles of the individual authors

Technological Change and Rural Development in Poor Countries Kartik Chandra Roy, Cal Clark, 1994 Rural development is a subject that appears to be plagued by a central paradox development is necessary to alleviate rural poverty but while new technology has raised agricultural output it has also increased the suffering of millions of poor landless families in many Third World countries The rural poor especially women have been marginalized urban migrants have become desperate unemployed squatters not well paid industrial workers and environmental degradation has proved severe The authors argue that many development programmes go awry because the authorities neglect essential development issues Development must be defined in terms of the provision of basic human needs which include life expectancy infant mortality and literacy indicators which reflect the quality of life of the bulk of the population not just a narrow elite What they suggest is that the issues neglected by the conventional approach must be addressed if true development is to occur

Technology And Social Change In Rural Areas Gene F Summers, 2019-07-11 The possibility of nuclear war the failure of the Green Revolution the capabilities of genetic engineering and other actual and potential effects of technological innovations have created demands for a more humane application of technology Addressing this issue Technology and Social Change in Rural Areas is a clear assessment of the current state of affairs The book begins with a discussion of the changing paradigms of technology adoption and diffusion the dynamics of public resistance and the question of social responsibility in an age of synthetic biology In subsequent sections the contributors assess the revolutionary effect of technology on agriculture worldwide and conclude that radically new public policies are essential expose the transformations of rural life and communities that result from the localized effects of technology and its use as a weapon in world system politics and critically examine the appropriate technology movement The essays are presented to honor Professor Eugene A Wilkening for his many pioneering and lasting contributions to the study of technology and rural social change The book includes an intellectual biography of Professor Wilkening written by his long time colleague and friend William H Sewell
