that were in all the world. And the King asked them : — "But they are the downy ones?" and all the birds answered, No. "Well," said the King, "where is the great bird?" They had to wait there for a long time for the eagle to make his appearance, when at last he came all in a perspiration, after sending two little birds high up in the sky to whistle on him to make all the haste he possibly could. The King asked the great bird, "And he saw the great castle?" and the bird said : — "Yes, I came from there where it now is." "Well," says the King to him, "this young gentleman has lost it, and you must go with him back to it; but stop till you get a bit of something to eat first."

They killed a sheep, and sent the best part of it to feed the eagle on his journey over the sea, and had to carry Jack on his back. Now when they came in sight of the castle, they did not know what to do to get the little golden box. "Well, the little mouse said to them, "Leave me down, and I will get the little box for you." So the mouse stole into the castle, and got hold of the box; and when he was coming down the stairs, it fell down, and he was very near being caught. His voice coming out with it, laughing his last. "Have you got it?" Jack said to him; he said, "Yes," and off they went back again, and left the castle behind.

Suddenly she heard a croaking voice, and she looked up and saw a great frog with goggle eyes looking at her and speaking to her.

"What's the matter, dearie?" it said.

"Oh, dear, oh dear," she said, "my stepmother has sent me all this long way to fill this sieve with water from the Well of the World's End, and I can't fill it no how at all."

"Well," said the frog, "if you promise me to do whatever I bid you for a whole night long, I'll tell you how to fill it."

So the girl agreed, and then the frog said :

"Dip it with moss and soak it with clay,
And then it will carry the water away."

and then it gave a hop, skip and jump, and went flap-lap the Well of the World's End.

So the girl looked about for some moss, and lined the bottom of the sieve with it, and over that she put some clay, and then she dipped it once again into the Well of the World's End; and this time, the water didn't run out, and she turned to go away.

Just then the frog popped up its head out of the Well of the World's End, and said : — "Remember your promise."

"All right," said the girl; for thought she, "what harm can a frog do me?"

So she went back to her stepmother, and brought the
