Documents of Foreign Trade

The international trade is heavily documented because the trade transactions are not usually handled by the buyers and sellers directly. Since these transactions are generally taken care of by forwarding and clearing agents, problems may arise in connection with the despatch, storage and insurance of goods. Documentation helps the trading partners in establishing that the trade transaction have been carried out in accordance with the contract of sale hence it activates the buyers obligation to pay after the availability of the proof that the seller has fulfilled his obligation.

These documents are called 'documents of foreign trade' and they are used by the banks in settlement of claims. They are generally classified as documents serving evidence, documents of title and securities. Airway bills and railway receipts, forwarder's certificates of receipt and transportation, postal despatch documents, commercial documents, and customs documents are regarded as documents of evidence. The documents which certify a particular title to goods, like bills of lading, the inland waterways bills of lading, warehouse receipt, as also the insurance policy and certificate of insurance, are regarded as documents of title and securities. These documents are submitted in sets and are issued and signed by the designated authorities in compliance with the terms of contract of sale. The exporter or his freight forwarding agents are responsible to make the required documents available to the importer.

CATEGORIES OF DOCUMENTS:

These documents fall into the following five broad categories according to their functions:

- 1) Commercial documents
- 2) Official documents
- 3) Insurance documents
- 4) Transportation documents
- 5) Financial and financing documents

1. Commercial Documents

These documents evidence the quantity, quality and price of goods supplied to the buyer by the seller.

The following commercial documents are generally used in foreign trade and they have been defined under Article 37 of UCP-500

- (a) Invoices
- (b) Weight Notes
- (c) Packing list and specifications
- (d) Quality or Inspection Certificates.
