Snow On Snow:

Annual Report New York. State Engineer and Surveyor, 1916 Physical Characteristics of the Snow Cover, Fort Greely, Alaska, 1966-67 Michael A. Bilello, Roy E. Bates, James Riley, 1970 Observations were made at 19 sites in and around the Fort Greely Military Reservation in Alaska during the winter of 1966-67 to obtain data on the depth and physical properties of the snow cover Snowfall in 1966-67 totaled 245 cm which was more than 2 1/2 times the seasonal normal Maximum snow depths of 80 to 100 cm were observed in a major portion of the reservation Measurements at nine sites showed that the snow density at Fort Greely was generally light e.g. the average density in the forest did not exceed 0.24 g/cm³ However exceptions such as at Jarvis Creek where the density averaged 0.33 g/cm³ could be expected On the average less snow falls at Fort Greely than at other interior Alaskan locations but the average density of the snow cover at all interior Alaska sites is quite light Relationships between snow cover properties and climate were tested using data collected at Fort Greely The results substantiated the relationships between 1 snow hardness and snow density measurements and 2 average snow densities with average windspeed and air temperatures Snow temperature measurements at Fort Greely showed that the snow in the forest was colder than at exposed sites primarily because the average air temperature within the forest canopy was lower than that in the open area Author Properties of Snow and Its Density Toshio Oda, 1954 Remote Sensing of the Terrestrial Water Cycle Venkataraman Lakshmi, 2014-12-08 Remote Sensing of the Terrestrial Water Cycle is an outcome of the AGU Chapman Conference held in February 2012 This is a comprehensive volume that examines the use of available remote sensing satellite data as well as data from future missions that can be used to expand our knowledge in quantifying the spatial and temporal variations in the terrestrial water cycle Volume highlights include An in depth discussion of the global water cycle Approaches to various problems in climate weather hydrology and agriculture Applications of satellite remote sensing in measuring precipitation surface water snow soil moisture groundwater modeling and data assimilation A description of the use of satellite data for accurately estimating and monitoring the components of the hydrological cycle Discussion of the measurement of multiple geophysical variables and properties over different landscapes on a temporal and a regional scale Remote Sensing of the Terrestrial Water Cycle is a valuable resource for students and research professionals in the hydrology ecology atmospheric sciences geography and geological sciences communities
