

in these articles. With individual concerns for profit-and-power outweighing the long term success of societies and environments, the worldwide, market-driven economy brings about increasingly centralized and monopolized ownership of land, resources, money, and, ultimately, power.

In this volume, the authors effectively demonstrate the impacts that social, political, and economic inequalities have on local-level systems. To a lesser extent, they point out where one should be looking in order to change these unequal relations. They paint a complex picture of problems that have led to, and continue to, characterize these types of inequalities. However, no in-depth explorations of practical solutions are provided. Although the primary goal of this volume is to demonstrate the causes of environmental destruction (and these points are well made), it would have provided more balance to the collection if there were to be at least one full article that critically examined a specific case regarding solutions. Whether or not that case was successful or unsuccessful, it still would have allowed the authors to more clearly lay out their vision for how endeavors such as these should proceed, as well as underscore how they have failed in the past. This is a point that Durham overreaches when, in the conclusion he states that "a key implication of these papers is that further research is warranted both to expand the theoretical framework of political ecology and to test its applicability in particular contexts." (p. 262).

There exists no easy solution and no one aspect of the equation can be changed that will subsequently fix the remaining problems. Due to this, the few solutions that the authors do mention remain broad reaching and complex. In part this is because the paradigm of political ecology from which they are operating is still not fully articulated in an anthropological context. It is with some optimism that the authors note the increased application of political ecology since the 1980s. While admiring the attempts of earlier work from the 1960s and 1970s undertaken by such scholars as Clifford Geertz, John Cole, and Eric Wolf, Durham ultimately concludes that "these few case studies fell short of providing analytic tools worthy of a general new approach" (p. 249). In summary, because of its examination of power differentials, as well as its clear and systematic presentation on the introduction of political ecology to anthropology, this volume will prove beneficial for anthropologists and equally useful for geographers, political scientists, environmental scientists, ecologists, and economists alike.

The Subsistence Perspective: Beyond The Globalized Economy

Veronika Bennholdt-Thomsen and Maria Mies, New York: Zed Books, 2000.

Reviewed by K. Ravi Srinivas, Madurai, India.

The authors, well known for their work on women and development, call for a radical perspective on globalization and industrial society. They argue that a subsistence perspective is the alternative to the problems created in the name of development. Subsistence is based on the strength of the people and is a perspective that puts nature and peoples' needs before the market and the accumulation of wealth and capital. The authors build on the theoretical basis developed in their earlier works. They argue that traditional responses by trade unions and the left are no answer to the problems of the modern world. Further, they argue that the globalized economy poses new challenges and that the subsistence perspective is the alternative to the globalization, free trade, and the penetration of market forces into every aspect of life.

They point out that, even in the West, subsistence production has a long history. Further, subsistence production continues even today in many parts of the world, particularly in developing nations. According to the authors, "The concept includes many things that are subsumed under head ingrowth as regionalization, local economy, self-sufficiency, new commons, alternative lifestyles, a caring economy, a living economy, the third way" (p. 20). The book is written in support of the subsistence perspective and is also a critique of globalization and the modern industrial society. The authors try to prove that subsistence perspective is not just familial dynamics and how women locate themselves in this transition period affecting the economy as well as social and environmental structures and values. Densely populated Upper Silesia in southern Poland with one of the longest histories of industrialization, extractivism and environmental degradation in Europe can be considered as a microcosm of regions that have undergone such changes due to energy transition. The traces of telling socio-economic changes as well as the tangle of modernity and conservatism are both clearly visible in the local region and society. The book documents the Silesian changes and highlights the female perspective, their culture identities as well as empowerment and the agency. The paradigm of feminist and masculinity studies helps in presenting the complexity and the challenges of the just energy transition. This is a topical volume given that many regions of the world are undergoing similar changes and is an interesting read for decision makers, policy experts, environmentalists as well as social scientists who study issues related to sustainability and environmental societal challenges in energy transition. Beyond Mothering Earth Sherilyn Macgregor, 2011-11-01 Women's environmental activism is often described in maternalist terms as if motherhood and caring for the environment go hand in hand. While feminists celebrate this connection, women and all those who care for people and environments are facing increasing burdens and decreasing time for civic engagement. In Beyond Mothering Earth, MacGregor argues that celebrations of earthcare as women's unique contribution to the search for sustainability often neglect to consider the importance of politics and citizenship in women's lives. Drawing on interviews with women who juggle private caring with civic engagement in quality of life concerns, she proposes an alternative: a project of feminist ecological citizenship that affirms the practice of citizenship as an intrinsically valuable activity while recognizing the foundational aspects of caring labour and natural processes that allow its specificity to flourish. Beyond Mothering Earth provides an original and empirically grounded understanding of women's involvement in quality of life activism and an analysis of citizenship that makes an important contribution to contemporary discussions of green politics, globalization, neoliberalism and democratic justice. It will be of value to scholars and activists interested in the politics of environmental sustainability and the shifting meanings of citizenship in an increasingly vulnerable world.

Re-enchanting the World Silvia Federici, 2018-11-01 Silvia Federici is one of the most important contemporary theorists of capitalism and feminist movements. In this collection of her work spanning over twenty years, she provides a detailed history and critique of the politics of the commons from a feminist perspective. In her clear and combative voice, Federici provides readers with an analysis of some of the key issues and debates in contemporary thinking on this subject. Drawing on rich historical research, she maps the connections between the previous forms of enclosure that occurred with the birth of capitalism and the destruction of the commons and the new enclosures at the heart of the present phase of global capitalist accumulation. Considering the commons from a feminist perspective, this collection centers on women and reproductive work as crucial to both our economic survival and the construction of a world free from the hierarchies and divisions capital has planted in the body of the world proletariat Federici is clear that the commons should not be understood as happy islands in a sea of exploitative relations but rather autonomous spaces from which to challenge the existing capitalist organization of life and labor Seeking Environmental Justice ,2008-01-01 The 5th Environmental Justice and Global Citizenship conference was held at Oxford UK in 2006 This decidedly trans disciplinary international event attracted participants from traditionally separate academic perspectives each ambassadors for their disciplines and each seeking and making connections with other disciplines and other understandings Some of the presentations from this conference have been further developed for inclusion in this book yielding 14 chapters of paradigmatic richness covering issues ranging from environmental education and the nature of global multinational corporations to the role of environmental activism and consideration of how democratically representative some campaigns may be This book will be of great interest to anyone working in these areas as well as an excellent introductory journey for those seeking to become pan paradigmatic Who Will Build the Ark? Lola Seaton,Benjamin Kunkel,2023-06-27 What ecological politics should the left propose In Who Will Build the Ark leading radical thinkers debate left alternatives to runaway global heating capitalist crisis and wider environmental breakdown clarifying the stakes in today s key disputes between Green New Deal supporters and proponents of degrowth In a series of landmark texts first published by New Left Review Herman Daly and Benjamin Kunkel discusses the possibility of an egalitarian steady state economy while Robert Pollin warns against the worldwide slump degrowth could bring and calls instead for a single issue campaign 2 per cent of global GDP dedicated to the switch to renewable energy as the swiftest solution to the emissions crisis Nancy Fraser envisages an eco socialist exit from capitalism s multifold crises while Troy Vettese advocates eco austerity and half earth rewilding Lola Seaton draws out the strategic implications of these contested perspectives in a set of unavoidable green questions In the realm of contemporary politics Alyssa Battistoni writes on the dead end of COP diplomacy C dric Durand asks whether energy shortages will derail the transition away from fossil fuels and Thomas Meaney compares Green New Deal proposals to the pinched reality of Biden s Inflation Reduction Act The world s major powers accept the likelihood of dangerous climate change yet seem incapable of averting it Can radical green models generate the social leverage needed to do so Or as Mike Davis puts it Who will build the Ark Art/Commons Massimiliano Mollona,2021-05-20 Can art provide a critique of political economy This question originally formulated by the romantic philosophers John Ruskin and William Morris continues to be at the core of contemporary anti capitalist and post colonial struggles As art and culture feed an urban rentierism based on gentrification mass tourism and hyper consumption art commons are radicalizing urban politics across the globe through new political and artistic practices Art Commons is the first book to theorise the commons from the perspectives of contemporary art history and anthropology focusing on the ongoing tensions between art and capitalism Massimiliano Mollona s study is grounded in an analysis of contemporary artistic and curatorial practices which the author describes as practices of commoning based on co production participation mutualism and the valorization of reproductive labour Art Commons gives stimulating first person accounts of five projects the author conducted at the intersection of art activism and pedagogy ranging from participatory film projects in Brazil Norway and the UK to his directorship of the Athens Biennale Mollona proposes a novel theoretical approach to current debates on the commons and shows that art can provide both a language of anti capitalist and post colonial critique as well as a distinctive set of skills and practices of commoning

Integral Dynamics Ronnie Lessem,Alexander Schieffer,Samuel D. Rima,2016-05-23 The theory of integral dynamics is based on the view that the development of individual leaders or entrepreneurs requires the simultaneous development of institutions and societies It seeks a specific way forward for each society fundamentally different from but drawing on its past Nearly every natural science has been transformed from an analytically based approach to a dynamic one now it is time for society and culture to follow suit locally and globally Each culture discipline and person is incomplete and is in need of others in order to develop and evolve This book sets out a curriculum for a new integral trans cultural and trans disciplinary area of study inclusive of but extending beyond economics and enterprise It embraces a trans personal perspective linking self with community enterprise and society and focusing on the vital relationship between local identity and global integrity For the government policy maker the enlightened business practitioner and the student and researcher into economics and enterprise the new discipline is set out here in complete detail by a multi national team of Gower s Transformation and Innovation Series authors Illuminated with examples relating the conceptual to the practical this is a text not for a pre modern modern or even post modern era but for what has been called our trans modern age Understanding Globalization Robert K.
