Successful Industrial Product Innovation:

Successful Industrial Innovations Sumner Myers, Donald George Marquis, National Science Foundation (U.S.), 1969
This report summarizes the results of a study conducted over the years 1963 to 1967 by the National Planning Association for the National Science Foundation. This project had its origins in the deep and continuing interest of the National Science Foundation in the question of the impact of science and technology on society. The objective was to provide empirical knowledge about the factors which stimulate or advance the application in the civilian economy of scientific and technological findings. As the project developed it took the form of a statistical study of innovations in selected industries: the industries, railroads and railroad suppliers, computer manufacturers and suppliers, and housing suppliers. Purposely selected to provide a view of the innovation process in industries with differential involvement in and dependence on current technological advances. The results are presented in a manner intended to highlight the differences or similarities of the innovative process in the several industries. In a similar manner, differences and similarities between original innovations (those which are new to the economy) as well as the firm are juxtaposed where relevant with corresponding information for adopted innovations (i.e., innovations new to the firm but not new to the economy). Industrial Product Innovation F. A. John, 2018-03-26. Originally published in 1985, this book looks at the way in which some businesses in the high technology manufacturing industry have organized their structures and processes in order to manage product innovation effectively. Including detailed case studies of both British and American companies, the book gives examples of both effective and less effective practices. The author puts forward a general framework of good practice for the benefit of both practitioners and business studies students. Managing Product Innovation In The Process Industries: From Customer Understanding To Product Launch - Uncover The Intrinsic Nature Of Developing Non-assembled Products Thomas Lager, 2024-04-29. This book puts management of product innovation in a corporate strategic perspective and argues that a company's competitive position is strongly related to an underlying unique and continually renewed product innovation work process which drives innovation and delivery of new or improved products in the marketplace. The book will take the reader through a systematic examination of the necessary consecutive steps for companies' successful development of non-assembled products in the cluster of process industries. For readers in search of a seamless, easy-to-use, effective formal product innovation work process from customer understanding to product launch, this book provides a guiding framework and hands-on advice for work process design. A novel five-phase structural process model of the product innovation work process is initially introduced in order to orchestrate a more dynamic interaction between product and process innovation and the integration of sustainability and product eco-design in product design. The reader will learn first about the importance of aligning new product ideas with the corporate business model and product innovation strategy during the contextualization phase and then how to transform product ideas into well-defined complementary product and process concepts. In the movement of product ideas from the conceptualization phase to industrialization the use of pilot planting and production trials for scale up of product and process concepts is further explored To secure a design for processability a novel industrialization sub process is introduced and the integration of complementary development of product and service offerings is further examined The deployment of application development throughout and after product launch is highlighted for an enhancement of product commercialization and a reduction of time to break even for new products Successful Industrial Product Innovation

Roos,2005 Because there is a lack of innovation research in the forest products industry and innovative activities in the industry are not well documented this study attempted to fill that void The objectives of this study were to understand the process and definition of innovation in the forest products industry identify the constraints on innovative activities identify resources that would improve innovation in forest products companies compare the innovation environments in Alaska and

Oregon and provide a benchmark study for innovation in the forest products industry This study revealed that there are several aspects of innovation in the forest products industry In addition the innovation process is a combination of semiformal development stages trial and error intuition and luck A variety of factors constrained companies from being more innovative including government regulations shipping and labor costs lack of cash flow raw material characteristics marketing expertise and raw material supply There do not appear to be any resources that would be helpful to forest products companies at least none that the interviewed companies could recommend Offering companies the chance to exchange ideas and network is the most valuable resource available The innovation environments in Alaska and Oregon are somewhat similar yet different in the marketing tactics employed and the techniques used to obtain market information Furthermore the type of innovation projects that each region focuses on differs as does the actual process used to develop innovations Future research should focus on completing a quantitative component to this study developing short courses or 1 day seminars identifying factors that contribute to innovation success and failure investigating why the forest products industry is not innovative by nature and exploring the external acquisition of innovation in the forest products industry
