

Post-Divestiture Telecommunications Policy Making

Brian R. Moir, *Partner,
Fisher, Wayland, Cooper and Leader*

A considerable amount of attention has been focused on the existing boundaries of the telecommunications marketplace as drawn by the terms of the Modified Final Judgment (MFJ) and the rules of the Federal Communications Commission (FCC). The message of the Regional Holding Companies (RHC's) of the Bell Operating Companies (BOC's) that many of the existing rules of the MFJ and the FCC are obsolete, anti-competitive, frustrating the applications of modern technology, and unfair to the public, is now being espoused by some government policy makers in Washington, D.C. The divorced offspring of the former Bell System, the BOC's, should receive the primary credit for this discussion. The response from the rest of the telecommunications industry has been quite understandable; basically, the rest of the industry has expressed serious concerns about the BOC proposals being made by some of these government policy makers.

Surprisingly, the proponents of the BOC proposals have not been willing to address three rather fundamental questions before attempting to proceed with the BOC proposals. First, what changes have occurred in the three years since divestiture that warrant a transfer of MFJ's jurisdiction or a change in the fundamental role outlined for this nation's seven dominant suppliers of local bottleneck facilities, that is, local telephone services? Second, what are the public interest objectives that are reasonably expected to be accomplished by adopting these BOC proposals? Finally, does the FCC have the resources, both human and technical, expertise, and will to adequately fulfill its existing jurisdiction, let alone additional burdens such as overseeing the terms of the MFJ and the other aspects of the BOC proposals?

Long distance service suppliers, information service suppliers, equipment vendors, some local service suppliers, state regulators, and residential and business telecommunications users have all united in their concern that the BOC proposals, in particular legislation (S. 2565) in the U.S. Senate introduced by Senator Dole during the 99th Congress, do not balance the requirements for a viable telecommunications industry with the desires of the BOC's. This common concern drew together the most diverse group ever assembled within the telecommunications industry in order to ensure that government policy makers were educated about the concerns of the majority of the industry, not just the desires of this nation's seven most dominant suppliers of local telephone services—the BOC's. After months of effort, this diverse body of businesses and associations was able to sufficiently educate congressional members and staff so that not only did the BOC bill (S. 2565) not receive any action during the 99th Congress, but that key members of the House of Representatives and Senate began to propose alternatives and amendments to the BOC bill in an attempt to balance the desires of the BOC's with those of the rest of the industry.

What does the 100th Congress hold for these issues? The new Congress will have changes in leadership. In the House of Representatives, the subcommittee of the Committee on Energy and Commerce with jurisdiction over telecommunications will have a new chairman, with the election of Timothy E. Wirth, its most recent chairman, to the Senate. In the Senate, the changes will be more dramatic since the Democrats have regained control for the first time during the Reagan administration. While it is quite likely that some of the same telecommunications issues will be considered during the 100th Congress, it is also quite likely that the concerns of the rest of the telecommunications industry, as opposed to the BOC's, will be more prevalent in these legislative efforts than they were in the 99th Congress.

Telecommunications users will participate in these policy making deliberations. Whether they do so in concert with others has not yet been determined, but their concerns are quite clear. Government policy makers must first see that the Congress rigorously utilizes its authority to oversee the FCC in order to gain a clear understanding of how well the FCC is actually coping with its statutory mandate in the post-divestiture era. Only after such a thorough investigation, is it appropriate to review the MFJ and the desires of the BOC's.

Since divestiture, the telecommunications user community has been forced to cope with the following problems: 1) rate claims caused by rapidly changing prices, 2) confusion because of increased rate restructuring, 3) service migration caused by the BOC attempts to influence customer choice by creating economic disincentives for certain services, in particular non-wired services, with unattractive (that is, non-cost based) pricing schemes, 4) supplier turnover, 5) increased variations in service and equipment quality, 6) more complicated procedures for ordering, maintenance, and other support services, 7) service provisioning delays, 8) increased turnover of user investment because of the rapid emergence of new technologies, and 9) prices for local service that are higher than used to be because of excessively high authorized rates of return for the BOC's. These problems make it difficult for American businesses to plan their use of telecommunications resources, forecast costs, prepare budgets, and implement new technologies according to recognized financial and engineering criteria. This is particularly troubling to the user community and the nation at large since telecommunications has become a heavily used tool by American businesses to reach the cutting-edge of competition within their various industries.

Because of the importance of telecommunications to American businesses, the user community views all telecommunications issues from two rather simple perspectives: 1) will the action result in prices being closer to cost, and 2) will a decision increase user choice in a more competitive arena? The BOC's are the dominant suppliers of local service

Telecommunications In The Post Divestiture Era:

Telecommunications in the Post-divestiture Era Albert L. Danielsen, David R. Kamerschen, 1986 A Textbook on ATM Telecommunications P. S. Neelakanta, 2018-10-03

With quantum leaps in science and technology occurring at breakneck speed professionals in virtually every field face a daunting task practicing their discipline while keeping abreast of new advances and applications in their field. In no field is this more applicable than in the rapidly growing field of telecommunications engineering. Practicing engineers who work with ATM technology on a daily basis must not only keep their skill sharp in areas such as ATM network interfaces protocols and standards but they must also stay informed about new classes of ATM applications. A Textbook on ATM Telecommunications gives active telecommunications engineers the advantage they need to stay sharp in their field. From the very basics of ATM to state of the art applications it covers the gamut of topics related to this intriguing switching and multiplexing strategy. Starting with an introduction to telecommunications this text combines the theory underlying broadband communications technology with applied practical instruction and lessons gleaned from industry. The author covers fundamental communications and network theory followed by applied ATM networking. Each chapter includes design exercises as well as worked examples. A Textbook on ATM Telecommunications includes examples of design and implementation making it an ideal tool for both aspiring and practicing telecommunication professionals.

Features After the Breakup Barry G. Cole, 1991

On January 8 1982 the AT T divestiture consent decree was announced. A company with 150 billion in assets more than General Motors General Electric U S Steel Eastman Kodak and Xerox combined the country's second largest employer with over a million employees and the nation's most widely held security with over three million shareholders was to be broken up on the first day of 1984. Many economists government officials people in the telecommunications industry and media observers predicted dire consequences for the best telephone system in the world. Years later some experts claim the divestiture has been a great success. According to present AT T Chairman and CEO Robert Allen long distance rates have dropped local rates have not increased as dramatically as predicted more households are on the network other long distance and equipment companies now effectively compete with AT T and consumers have received more choices in products better values and lower prices. Others are far less positive in their evaluation of divestiture's effects.

After the Breakup: Assessing the New Post AT T Divestiture Era describes the current state of telecommunications and how the industry has changed in the first decade of divestiture. Drawn from a major project organized by the Center for Telecommunications and Information Studies at Columbia University's Graduate School of Business this volume offers an objective account of divestiture.

Universal Service in a Competitive Local Exchange Telecommunications Environment Donald Gale, 2006-05-22
The telecommunications industry has evolved into a very competitive industry since 1980 Aggressive competition is the norm in the long distance equipment operator services and many other segments of the industry The remaining segment of the market without widespread meaningful competition is the last mile wireline service to the customer premise Incumbent local exchange carriers enjoy a monopoly to serve nearly all residences and most business customers collecting over 99% of all local exchange service revenues Using their monopoly status incumbents have developed a cross subsidy system which uses the rates paid by some customers to lower the rates paid by others to support a policy known as universal service This policy has resulted in telephone service reaching 94% of America s households Carriers claim that this policy cost them 20 billion annually potential entrants claim the true cost is as low as 4 billion and the rest is profit In the Telecommunications Act of 1996 Congress ordered the end of the local exchange monopoly and opened the local markets to competition Congress also specified the continuation of universal service specified that telephone penetration should be increased and specified that the universal service concept will be applied to America s schools libraries and rural health centers Congress also specified that unlike today all carriers will contribute fairly and equitably fairly to the universal service fund and that all carriers providing local service including new competitors will be eligible to receive support from the fund The cost to meet these requirements in a competitive environment totals 7.2 billion or 5.1% of net carrier revenue This thesis addresses the definition of universal service and the services that should be eligible for support the new competitive environment how to collect the universal service support fund and how to best distribute the funds to customers targeted to receive support from the system those in high cost areas low income consumers and schools and libraries for advanced communications services
