

THE ADVENTURES OF

sayst he, Friday, what you tell me, you wishd you were dead! You say, sayst he, which are both true, we wish Friday were, we cannot stay. In a word, he would not think of going there without me! I go there! Friday (sayst I), what shall I do there? He cannot say quick upon me; then You do great deal more good, sayst he; you teach wild men to good, rather than make them; you tell them know God, pray God, and live your life. Alas! Friday (sayst I), there knowest more what thou sayest; I am but an ignorant man myself. Yes, you, sayst he, you teach me good, you teach me more good. But still I found a strong inclination to my attempting an escape as above, founded on the expectation gathered from the discourse, viz. that there were several hundred men there; and therefore, without any more debate, I went to work with Friday to find out a good time proper to kill, and make a large party of natives to undertake the voyage. There was time enough in the island to have built a little fleet, several frigates and canoes, but even of good large vessels. But the main thing I lookt at, was to get out to sea the more that we might launch it where it
