Handbook of Clinical Behavioral Pediatrics Alan M. Gross, Ronald S. Drabman, 2013-03-07 Since 1978 the editors have collaborated on several research projects and spent many hours at conventions discussing research graduate education and patient care The idea for this volume arose when we both concluded that the area of behavioral pediatrics needed a how to book Several important scholarly reviews had recently appeared They presented excellent summary information concerning the general assumptions and theories underlying the area of behavior

ioral medicine with children But these volumes devote very little attention to the application of clinical methods What was needed we thought was a book that would allow graduate students and practicing clinicians the opportunity to peer into the minds of eminent practitioners and understand their thinking Thus the book was conceived Editing books represents a special kind of challenge One has to sell an idea to a group of distinguished colleagues They have to believe enough in that idea to devote the considerable time and effort necessary to bring thought into reality In this case there were two ideas we tried to sell to our colleagues

Working with the Family in Primary Care Janet Christie-Seely, 1984 A systematic approach to the role that the family can and should play in improving health care management The concept of working with families toward this end is viewed as a major step forward in clarifying the role of the physician and nurse in family medicine Includes numerous case histories Changing Families Irving E. Sigel, 2012-12-06 In a previous volume Families as Learning Environments for Children we presented a series of chapters that dealt with research programs on the role of families as learning environments for children

Those studies were based on empirical data and sought answers to basic research questions with no explicit concern for the application of the results to practical problems. Rather, their purpose was to contribute primarily to conceptualization, research methodology, and psychological theory. Now in this volume, we turn our attention to intervention efforts to modify the way a family develops. As in our previous conference, the participants of the working conference on which the present volume is based are research scientists and scholars interested in application. This group is distinct from practitioners, however, whose primary focus is service. Participants in this conference have as their primary interest research into the problems of processes of application. Applied professional issues concerning the lives of families come from many varied sources, from some that are distant and impersonal, e.g., the law, to direct face-to-face efforts by educators, therapists. The variety of sources and types of applications are eloquent testimony to the degree to which families are subject to a host of societal forces whose implicit or explicit aim is to modify family functioning. For example, some educators may wish to alter family child-rearing patterns to enhance child development; the clinician seeks to help families come to terms and to cope with a schizophrenic child. The list can be extended.
