Abstract

Aim: To synthesize qualitative evidence of premenopausal women's experiences of fertility decision-making with a diagnosis of breast cancer.

Background: Breast cancer is increasingly more common in premenopausal women who may have not yet considered starting a family or have completed their families.

Design: Qualitative evidence synthesis guided by Thomas and Harden's three-stage approach to thematic analysis.

Data Sources: Twelve electronic databases were searched: CINAHL, Embase, Pubmed, Proquest, PsychINFO, Lenus, Scopus, Web of Science, Rian.ie, Medline, ETHOS e-theses online and DART Europe. No year limit was set.

Review Methods: The 'Enhancing transparency in reporting the synthesis of qualitative research guidelines' (ENTREQ) statement was followed.

Results: Fifteen qualitative studies were included in the synthesis. Seven review findings under four major themes were identified: (1) first comes survival, (2) making decisions 'under the gun', (3) health-care professionals should not make assumptions and (4) we want accurate, detailed information and we want it early. High confidence in six of the review findings was agreed.

Conclusion: Most women experienced rushed fertility preservation decision-making at a time when they also faced cancer treatment decisions. Women want detailed, clear information on fertility preservation early after their diagnosis.

The Fertility Of Working Women A Synthesis Of International Research:

The Fertility of Working Women Stanley Kupinsky, 1977 Women, Employment and the Family in the International Division of Labour J. Parpart, S. Stichter, 2016-07-27 In the present stage of international capitalist development women are increasingly being drawn into paid employment by multinational and state investment in the Third World This volume investigates the interrelations between women's participation in the urban wage economy and their productive and reproductive roles in the household and family It brings together a selection of important recent research on all major regions of the developing world by leading scholars in this emerging field It argues that the household itself is an important determinant of the character and timing of women's labour force participation and it assesses the extent to which family patterns can be expected to change as women increasingly work outside the home Perspectives on Development and Population Growth in the Third World O.G. Simmons, 2012-12-06 Until the early to mid 1970s social scientists in the fields of population and development were largely going their own ways Demographers relied almost exclusively on demographic transition theory as their paradigm for understanding the role of development in population change and fertility decline Conversely most development economists and other specialists were certainly aware of the constraints placed upon development objectives by population growth However the main development theories paid little attention to population and the implications of population growth for development Indeed it was not until after the World Population Conference in Bucharest in 1974 that the interaction of population and development became a serious and positive theme for social scientific study Accordingly since about the mid 1970s an extensive literature in the field of population and development has been generated And in 1975 under the auspices of The Population Council the journal Population and Development Review was founded a journal which in the past decade has developed into the premier publication in the world for work in this area But our understanding of development as it refers to change in Third World countries remained fragmented Moreover our understanding of the linkages and interactions between population and development was very limited It is in this regard that Ozzie Simmons's Perspectives on Development and Population Growth in the Third World will certainly have an impact

Womens' Roles and Population Trends in the Third World Richard Anker, Marya Buvinic, Nadia H. Youssef, 2012-07-26 First published in 1982 this collection was the result of an ambitious and wide ranging interdisciplinary research programme conducted by the International Labour Office ILO on the relationship between women's roles and demographic change with a view to influencing contemporary government and non government policy and future research in the field The ILO held an informal gathering of leading researchers in the fields of economics anthropology sociology and demography and this volume represents a unique and practically orientated collection offering valuable insights into contemporary perspectives on women's studies and population dynamics Handbook of Marriage and the Family Suzanne K. Steinmetz, Marvin B. Sussman, 2013-11-11 The lucid straightforward Preface of this Handbook by the two editors and the comprehensive perspectives offered in the Introduction by one of them leave little for a Foreword to add. It is therefore limited to two relevant but not intrinsically related points: vis à vis research on marriage and the family in the interval since the first Handbook. Christensen 1964 appeared, namely the impact on this research of the politicization of the New Right and of the Feminist Enlightenment beginning in the mid sixties about the time of the first Handbook. In the late 1930s Willard Waller noted: Fifty years or more ago about 1890 most people had the greatest respect for the institution called the family and wished to learn nothing whatever about it. Everything that concerned the life of men and women and their children was shrouded from the light. Today much of that has been changed. Gone is the concealment of the way in which life begins, gone the irrational sanctity of the home. The aura of sentiment which once protected the family from discussion clings to it no more. We want to learn as much about it as we can and to understand it as thoroughly as possible, for there is a rising recognition in America that vast numbers of its families are sick from internal frustrations and from external buffeting. We are engaged in the process of reconstructing our family institutions through criticism and discussion. 1938 pp 3-4

Africa's Demographic Transition David Canning, Sangeeta Raja, Abdo S. Yazbeck, 2015-10-22 Africa is poised on the edge of a potential takeoff to sustained economic growth. This takeoff can be abetted by a demographic dividend from the changes in population age structure. Declines in child mortality followed by declines in fertility produce a bulge generation and a large number of working age people giving a boost to the economy. In the short run lower fertility leads to lower youth dependency rates and greater female labor force participation outside the home. Smaller family sizes also mean more resources to invest in the health and education per child, boosting worker productivity. In the long run increased life spans from health improvements mean that this large high earning cohort will also want to save for retirement, creating higher savings and investments leading to further productivity gains. Two things are required for the demographic dividend to generate an African economic takeoff. The first is to speed up the fertility decline that is currently slow or stalled in many countries. The second is economic policies that take advantage of the opportunity offered by demography. While demographic change can produce more and high quality workers, this potential workforce needs to be productively employed if Africa is to reap the dividend. However, once underway, the relationship between demographic change and human development works in both directions, creating a virtuous cycle that can accelerate fertility decline, social development and economic growth. Empirical evidence points to three key factors for speeding the fertility transition: child health, female education and women's empowerment, particularly through access to family planning. Harnessing the dividend requires job creation for the large youth cohorts entering working age and encouraging foreign investment until domestic savings and investment increase. The appropriate mix of policies in each country depends on their stage of the demographic transition.

Status Enhancement and Fertility John D. Kasarda, John O. G. Billy, Kirsten West, 2013-09-03 Status Enhancement and Fertility Reproductive Responses to Social Mobility and Educational Opportunity provides a theoretical framework in which research findings on the socioeconomic determinants of fertility may be integrated Starting with an introductory chapter on the substantive scope of the book separate chapters provide a detailed review appraisal and synthesis of the complex research literature on social mobility and fertility examine various statistical methodologies and suggest some fruitful avenues future research might pursue and discuss the role of education in enhancing the status of women and the main intervening variables that link education to reproductive behavior Subsequent chapters examines female labor force participation the value of children infant and child mortality age at marriage and first birth and family planning knowledge and practice The final chapter discusses policy issues derived from models and assessments presented in the preceding chapters This book may be used as an upper division or graduate level text in population courses
