

The book cover features a dramatic space scene. In the foreground, a large, complex space station with multiple solar panel arrays is shown from a low angle, giving it a sense of scale and depth. The station's structure is metallic and intricate. In the background, a large, dark planet or moon is visible, with a bright, fiery ring of fire or a solar flare encircling its upper portion. The sky is a deep black, dotted with small white stars. The overall tone is one of awe and exploration.

Running Through the Graveyard Thomas J. Miranda, 2016-07-15. This book contains a number of essays that address the decline of America and the causes of our impending demise. America is racing toward the graveyard of nations and is leaderless; we have lost our moral compass, our government is corrupt to the core, and we are reaping the benefits of an entitlement society. Meanwhile, we have dumbed down our education so that in many cases, high school graduates cannot fill out an unemployment form. High school graduates. Our religious leaders have lost their way and preach more social issues than salvation. The abortuaries have killed over 55 million, and counting of our unborn, and continue to do so while politicians wring their hands over political correctness. It is the author's hope that the reader will be made aware of these nation-destroying trends and will react to vote for real leaders, or this nation is heading for the graveyard of nations.
