Automatic Control Systems Regulate Nuclear Power Plant Operation

IGOR A. SHKARMATOV
First Deputy Director of Scientific Design
Bureaus, Ministry of Atomic Energy, USSR

Rapid development of nuclear power engineering in the USSR has been accompanied by the advance of automatic control systems.

SCS is built as a three-channel structure with a dual "open-loop" output. The control of input parameters in SCS is not possible.

The protection system permits a detailed verification of a signal as it proceeds through each of the inputs when the reactor is on heat, retaining at the same time a required degree of functional dependability.

The automatic control system of CPS provides control of both the process of heat exchangers and of each individual heat exchanger.

Control over the groups of heat exchangers is arranged in an automatic group-by-group transfer pattern, according to the program that can be altered through an out-of-service procedure.

Thermal assembly position, heat exchanger, digital display, and control panel are shown in the photograph.

Specifications of a CPS, 1966

Maximum number of the reactor, Agn	1
Maximum number of the reactor, Agn	1
Powering voltage of the reactor, V	11.5
Powering frequency of the reactor, Hz	50
Synchronous rotation speed, rpm	3000
Speed number of the reactor, R	10.0
Powering voltage of the reactor, V	11.5

The photograph shows a CPS control panel with a digital display and control buttons.
