

Stained Glass

Sun rays reflecting on shattered stained glass,
I am in between those broken cracks.
Trying to gain hindsight
of the past that has left me in flight.
The ground is only stable when I kneel,
But there is too much to see and feel.
What will it take for me to find wholeness and rest?
Will it be an unwanted wreck or the sting of death?
The past, I do not understand,
But I want to try, I want to try to be it's friend.
The present, I try to see,
And I want to try, I want to try to let it heal.
The future is uncertain,
like the coin thrown into the fountain.
But I still want to try to reconcile with the past and fix the beautiful, broken glass.

Stained Glass Poems:

Stained Glass William Mills, 1979 Stained Glass William Mills, 1979-01-01 Stained Glass Rosanna Warren, 1994-05

Rosanna Warren's first collection of poetry Each Leaf Shines Separate announced the emergence of a fresh voice in contemporary American poetry and earned praise from John Hollander, Richard Eberhart, and Mark Strand. Now in her second book, Rosanna Warren has fulfilled her promise. In Stained Glass, she continues to examine as John Hollander said of her first book, the relation of art to nature, exploring the ultimate naturalness of the world of picture and reading tenderly and shrewdly the forms of fable in which reality presents itself to the passionate gaze. Yet in this volume, the poems are more personal and intimate; they possess an emotional depth that extends the earlier work. Stained Glass is a book of mourning. It begins with an echo of Milton's Lycidas and concludes with an evocation of Iliad XXIV. In its course, it touches on many scenes of loss, personal and impersonal. In the voice of an Eskimo mother in a Parisian market scene, in brilliant translations of poems by Max Jacob and Pierre Reverdy to the more intimate elegies, the human drama unfolds within the larger rhythms of the natural landscape. In poems that are classical and eloquent, ranging from sonnets and rhymed quatrains to highly flexible free verse, Warren vividly probes the savagery of aging, the corruption of the human body, and human estrangement from the divine, evoking as well scenes of simple tenderness and beauty. This year's recipient of an Ingram Merrill grant and the Lavan Award from the Academy of American Poets, that honors a poet of exceptional merit under the age of forty, Rosanna Warren is clearly one of the most gifted poets of her generation.

Stained Glass Windows Mary E. Ruch, 1970 Stained Glass Windows Grace Neahr Veeder, 1946 Poem In Stained Glass David Andrews, 2022-06

Poem In Stained Glass is a collection of poems made of strong verses. Verses that cannot be written every day and therefore that one does not encounter every day. So please, Reader, get ready. With each pause, you seem to see the alternation of thoughts. With each line, a concept takes shape. And with each poem, a state of mind, a glimpse of experience, lives and screams on the page. But again, please, Reader, do not stop here. Sit back and let yourself be carried away by these words. David Andrews, the youngest of seven children, was raised on a farm in the Finger Lakes region of upstate New York. He attended Cornell University and Stony Brook University and has taught writing, literature, and whatever else was asked of him for many years. His most recent academic post was as Associate Professor at Guangdong University of Foreign Studies in Guangzhou, China. He has published four books on film and literature. He has also been writing and publishing poetry since the early 1990s. Poem in Stained Glass is the product of that labor. He currently lives in Rochester, NY, with his wife.

A Stained Glass Window and Other Poems William Russell Clark, 1934 Poems John Henry Boner, 1903 Stained Glass Lily Pilar Redman, 2023-12-13

A series of poems exploring memories, innermost thoughts, and reflecting on yourself and your decisions. Stained Glass encourages expressing yourself through the written word and serves as a reminder that you are a work of art, no matter how stained you believe yourself to be.
