

The Great Divide

When the Isthmus of Panama closed about 3 million years ago, it created a land bridge between North and South America. However, aquatic species that were on either side of the land bridge were suddenly isolated from one another. One such species was the snapping shrimp. Though the shrimp looked exactly the same, males from one side of the Isthmus would snap aggressively at the females from the other rather than courting them.

6. After generations of living on separate sides of the Isthmus, snapping shrimp populations would have been considered allopatric.
