

You never have to be an economist to know about the debilitating effects of inflation. The housewife at the grocery store, the small businessman scrambling for funds for the purchase of inventory, the parents trying to put their children through Ivy League schools — in short, the producers and consumers of almost all goods and services in this country have reacted helplessly as the purchasing power of their dollars has shrunk at an ever-increasing rate. The cost of living, as measured by the Consumer Price Index, rose 8.8 per cent in 1975 and will climb another 11 to 16 per cent before the calendar is closed on 1976. In the meantime, President Ford's much-hyped-but-unimproved economic conditions collapse into national bankruptcy and his new economic proposals, including a five per cent surcharge on middle and upper income taxpayers, are labeled ineffective by leading economists and flat will resistance from the Democratic Congress.

Consider the following effects of the great rip-off.

Inflation is costing American taxpayers more than $35 billion a year in higher tax bills, according to economist Milton Friedman. This includes putting people up into higher tax brackets while their real income remains the same and the taxing of "paper" capital gains that are tax gains in all other the rate of inflation is taken into consideration.

The price tag on a Democratic congressional election is approaching $21,000 when four years of inflation, more, household and books are added up. And, the experience is future inflation rate of five per cent, the price of a Democratic may, rise — and most other prices — will be the in ten years.

Inflation has cost seniors and families 10 billion nearly one billion dollars since 1959, according to the Institute for Economic Research. That's one billion by 12 years — and the amount is going to rise every day.

Oil-consuming nations will pay more than $60 billion to the Arab oil-producing nations and lose in 1976 for the loss amount of oil they purchased for just $5 billion in 1975. The standard two-two is made of price has recently been passed into the consumer in the form of sharply higher oil and gas prices. Gasoline price go up more than 70 per cent in the past year alone.

But the effects of inflation go far beyond squaring prices and decreasing the value of money. Double-digit inflation has also gone through the West Coast community, cutting in the shared decline in each year since the Great Depression. The supply by Alan Greenspan, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, is the Council of Economic Advisors. (The West Coast is the worst victim of inflation, although inflation, has not been too far from the mark.

The American Industrial Average passed below the 800 mark for the first time in 11 years last month. In January of 1975, it stood at 1,051.

The Ford Foundation announced that its assets had declined in market value by over one third, adding to less than $2 billion less than $2 billion two years ago. As a result, the foundation is considering selling all of its grants to prevent greater study of inflation.

Syracuse College released figures indicating that its endowment had lost more than $75 million in market value in the last year and a half. The endowment, $75 million in 1975, now stands at less than $20 million.

So President Ford knows that there's a lot more that he political future at stake than to indicate the American people to "Wag Inflation Now." But the President is meeting of a money-consciousness in the case of inflation as far as Robert F. Waging 1975 is concerned. A retired businessman living in Naples, Florida, Waging has been hammering away at the subject since early last spring when he organized a corporation in the community to observe the public at large on the danger of galloping inflation. Now he's driving most of his energy to forming a national organization called Clinton Inflation Fighters that will work to prevent a "second great anti-inflation program."

Clinton Inflation Fighters aims to spread understanding of the causes and effects of inflation and to spur the public to do something about it. "Our first job," says Waging, "is one of giving the public education in the causes, effects, and corrective requirements needed to stop inflation, together with personal participation which is so vital to bring about the correction." Waging plans a three-pronged program to educate the public. It includes lectures in Waging's language is organized groups in every community, following symposiums, and rallies. "There's something on inflation using national and local television and radio." The first thing that should be done will have a national focus, with individuals asking questions of senators and reporting on personal anti-inflation actions that reduce the cost of living.

Specifically, Waging and his group will be reduced government spending with strictly balanced budgets at every level of government, non-inflationary control of money and credit by the Federal Reserve Board, wage and salary increases related to inflation, non-inflationary productivity, a foreign policy designed to end the exportation of inflation, personally disciplined purchase of non-inflationary to avoid excessive private debt, and personal conservation through the most efficient use of all natural resources.

Waging makes the magnitude of his undertaking is staggering, but he argues that this is precisely the reason that it will succeed. "We need a total anti-inflationary program," he stresses. "Military actions or fiscal actions alone won't solve the problem." The former general manager of a South Florida Corporation division reminds that there will be some bad inflation from the war on inflation, but he says that the federal government can counter them. "If unemployment shrinks and the economy improves, the program that the government initiates 'affluent public works programs, and I mean affluent.'"

Waging and his fellow inflation fighters believe that President Ford is on the right track in attempting to control inflation and is leading a "Public Money Number One." But he feels that the President's own program does not get at the root cause of inflation — "inflation in government." "Ford's idea was right. We have to take the battle on inflation now, now and for all. But I don't think we're being hard enough. As one writer for The Wall Street Journal put it, we're really being the inflationists."

As a result of his crusade, Waging has had correspondence with a large number of public and private officials. (I'm a terrible type," he laughs. "I spend most of my day picking away at the old opposition.") But his letters have brought results. From Jack N. Smith, president of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, came the following endorsement: "You are right. We need an enormous amount of government action to fight throughout the United States" to bring inflation under control. "Keep up the fine work." Waging has also received a letter from Senator Larry Potts (D, Fla.) praising his ability in the economic field. "It is definitely going to take some new approaches, non-partisan motivation, and have brought into the inflation problem before any kind of single approach can be agreed upon." And a recent appeal to fellow economist William Forman '80, President Ford's most trusted economic adviser, brought Waging a meeting with White House anti-inflation coordination last month.

Waging's two major problems when he began were a lack of publicity and a lack of money. He's doing quite a job at elevating the issue by personally delivering newspaper and magazine editors and by having members of the press read all of his speeches and symposia. "It's a tough job and editors are quick to respond," he explains. "We got 75 columns of publicity out of a speech in the Rotary in Lakeland, N. H." Now he's scheduled as a major fund-raising drive and hopes to tap corporate and public funds for funding his Clinton Inflation Fighters. "They've got a lot to make here," says Waging, suggesting a hope that they will contribute generously.

"Oil crisis," considers the campaign Waging. "Fighting inflation is easier said than done. But I feel a little when I was in Vietnam that applies to the current situation. Don't say it can't be done. Do it."

"Well, what are you going to do about it?" - Boss Tweed

In the 1870s Boss Tweed and Tammany were exposed in Thomas Nast's famous cartoons. Initially, such the public for what was in the 1970s, there is another subject, even more elusive than the Tweed ring and of nearly more persistent effect.

Well, what are you going to do about it? Get more sleep, as the President suggests? Take a cut in salary? Join the grass-roots Inflation Fighters? Drive less? Cut government spending? Cut personal spending? Wear a WIN button? The Atlantic Magazine will publish the best solutions — with commentary by resident economists — in an upcoming issue. Send us your ideas.
