Les relations qui rattachent la vaste diversité des variables sociales et économiques et les taux de délinquance font l'objet d'une étude à l'intention des réseaux de recensement de London, Ontario. Au moyen d'une analyse des éléments et la "régression multiple" deux modèles alternatifs ont été établis, un modèle des caractéristiques de la population et un modèle de caractéristiques domiciliaires. Les deux modèles indiquent que les variables socio-économiques présentent des pronostics plus fiables sur les taux de délinquance juvénile que ne le font les indicateurs de la situation familiale, la mobilité ou de la densité.

The search for stable relationships between social and economic variables and areal juvenile delinquency rates has generated considerable controversy during the past twenty years. Building on nineteenth Century studies by such as Henry Mayhew¹⁸⁶¹ and on the excellent tradition of Shaw and McKay¹⁹⁴² the ecological analysis of delinquency has developed certain generalizations which recur in the literature. Juvenile delinquency rates are higher in the more central areas of the city. Delinquency rates are higher in areas of low socio-economic status, poor housing and crowded conditions. Despite these findings, controversy has developed as more sophisticated statistical tools began to be used to analyze these relationships in a multi-variate fashion.

Lander¹⁹⁵⁴ in an important, path-finding study used partial correlation and factor analysis to investigate these relationships in Baltimore. He concluded that the hypothesized relationship between socio-economic status and delinquency was merely "statistical" and should be considered secondary to the more important relationship between "anomie" and delinquency. Anomie for Lander was operationalized as two variables, the per cent of dwellings owner-occupied (or more precisely, its inverse,

The Self-organizing Polity Laurent Dobuzinskis, 2019-07-11 Is the study of living systems a useful metaphor for political science In this book Dr Dobuzinskis argues for further exploration of biopolitical models to explain the complexity of political theory and social change His discussion emphasizes the new cybernetics which considers not only self regulating but also self organizing or self producing systems Self organizing systems operate in an autonomous sphere comparable to the autonomy of the political community and the political actors who compose this community The autonomy of these systems is maintained through dynamic equilibration processes that entail not only the preservation of a given structure but also at crucial times the creative rearrangement of the existing structure and its transformation into a new pattern of relations From this perspective a political crisis is both a threat to the political system and the occasion of its renewal stability may also mean decay Emphasizing the links that have developed historically between the natural and social sciences this book is a reflection on the merits of and difficulties involved in representing the evolutionary process at the political level as the problematic reproduction of national communities and states Within the Confines Jennifer M. Kilty, 2014 Western feminists have long treated the rule of law as an essential ingredient of social justice however as the contributors to this collection remind us meaningful justice remains out of reach for many women and racialized minorities precisely because the law turns a blind eye to the inequities that structure their daily lives In fourteen chapters that open vital debates about the erosion of the welfare state and the media's complicity in concealing political injustice Within the Confines details the brutal ironies of a society that criminalizes the vulnerable while absolving the elite Distinctive in its focus on Canada the book traces the linkages among racial ethnic sexual and economic vulnerability and reveals the inadequacies of legislative approaches to socio historical problems such as drug trafficking homelessness infanticide and the legacies of settler colonial violence In accessible prose the authors dismantle the myths behind topics that are often sensationalized in the media pornography single motherhood sex work filicide gangs domestic abuse prison conditions HIV nondisclosure and present alternative arguments that expose the justice system's role in widening the gap between the rich and the poor What emerges is a poignant challenge to the neoliberal fable that women and minorities in Western democracies now enjoy full equality and an urgent call to action for those who seek to shift institutional norms in more equitable directions A valuable resource for a wide range of fields including criminology sociology social anthropology gender studies political science social work and legal history this multidisciplinary volume offers a fresh perspective on the disturbingly predictable judgments that criminalized women face in Canada The Schools of Ontario, 1876-1976 Robert M.
