Taste & smell

Most of our special senses are chemoreception systems: gustation (taste) and olfaction (smell). The degree to which we respond to taste or smell depends on the nature of the stimulus and the nature of the receptor. The degree to which we respond to taste or smell depends on the nature of the stimulus and the nature of the receptor. The degree to which we respond to taste or smell depends on the nature of the stimulus and the nature of the receptor.

Concentrations

Taste receptors vary depending on the concentration of the substance in a given solution or solid. For low concentrations, taste is sweet and salty; as concentration increases, taste becomes sour and bitter.

Gustation

Gustation, the sense of taste, gives us information about the food and drink that we consume. Taste buds on the primary gustatory organ, the tongue, contain chemoreceptors called gustatory cells. These taste buds have four basic components: sweet, sour, salty, and bitter. A fifth taste, umami, is also present. The tongue is covered with papillae, which are the taste buds.

Olfaction

The sense of smell is called olfaction, or the detection of odors. Olfaction depends on specialized chemical receptors, or chemoreceptors, located within the olfactory epithelium. These receptors are designed to respond to small amounts of an odorant, a molecule that can be smelled. The brain interprets the input from these olfactory receptors to identify a particular odor. Humans can detect about 10,000 odors.

As air flows through the nose, the odors across the nasal cavity pass over the olfactory epithelium. Incoming odorant molecules can interact with the olfactory neurons, leading to the ability to detect odors by increasing the release of an impulse, which can activate the neurons of the brain.
