The Taming of Distance Elisabeth Airey, 2005 On 19 February 1876 New Zealand became telegraphically linked to the world it joined the international Victorian internet Contact with Sydney now took only seconds and London less than 24 hours But unlike today when everybody is their own instant telegraphist in 1876 the system needed a small army of specially trained undersea cable operators THE TAMING OF DISTANCE tells the story of those people Englishmen Australians and New Zealanders who worked the cable first from an isolated rural coastal location near Nelson and later from Wellington central But it is far from a narrow story of undersea telegraphy It is set in the wider context of British ownership of the line and interaction with the New Zealand Government and particularly the New Zealand Telegraph Department It tells of a rapidly changing world of national and international telecommunications which by the time the line closed in 1932 bore little resemblance to that of 1876 Above all it tells how those men and later women and their families lived and worked as part of a unique international community

Communications/Media/Geographies Paul C. Adams, Julie Cupples, Kevin Glynn, André Jansson, Shaun Moores, 2016-09-19 Although there are human geographers who have previously written on matters of media and communication and those in media and communication studies who have previously written on geographical issues this is the first book length dialogue in which experienced theorists and researchers from these different fields address each other directly and engage in conversation across traditional academic boundaries The result is a compelling discussion with the authors setting out statements of their positions before responding to the arguments made by others One significant aspect of this discussion is a spirited debate about the sort of interdisciplinary area that might emerge as a focus for future work Does the already established idea of communication geography offer the best way forward If so what would applied or critical forms of communication geography be concerned to do Could communication geography benefit from the sorts of conjunctural analysis that have been developed in contemporary cultural studies Might a further way forward be to imagine an interdisciplinary field of everyday life studies which would draw critically on non representational theories of practice and movement Readers of Communications Media Geographies are invited to join the debate thinking through such questions for themselves and the themes that are explored in this book for example of space place meaning power and ethics will be of interest not only to academics in human geography and in media and communication studies but also to a wider range of scholars from across the humanities and social sciences

Robinson,2012-11 In eight case studies by leading scholars in history archaeology business economics geography and political science the authors showcase the natural experiment or comparative method well known in any science concerned with the past on the discipline of human history That means according to the editors comparing preferably quantitatively and aided by statistical analyses different systems that are similar in many respects but that differ with respect to the factors whose influence one wishes to study The case studies in the book support two overall conclusions about the study of human history First historical comparisons have the potential for yielding insights that cannot be extracted from a single case study alone Second insofar as is possible when one proposes a conclusion one may be able to strengthen one s conclusion by gathering quantitative evidence or at least ranking one s outcomes from big to small and then by testing the conclusion s validity statistically      Sail and Steam Lars U.
