In 2015, we, the guest editors of this special issue of the International Journal of Sport Communication (IJSC), published a study that assessed the history and state of social-media scholarship in sport-management research. The study was a census review of 123 social-media articles mined from a cross-disciplinary examination of 29 scholarly journals from January 2008 to June 2014. We chose the January 2008 start date as we could not find any published work prior to that date, demonstrating how new this topic is. The review enabled us to conclude that there was a solid foundation in our understanding of social media in sport-management research. However, we also suggested that scholars should aim to develop more-sophisticated research questions covering broader topics, advance the use of theories, and expand research methods. To further our understanding of the complex interrelationship of social media and the sport industry and to celebrate a decade of work in social media in sport management, we initiated this special issue.

We are pleased to report that our call for papers received over 30 submissions, indicating high levels of interest and a good trajectory. Researchers demonstrated scientific rigor and great diversity in the research streams covered, the theoretical frameworks used, and the research methods employed. We are thankful to all who submitted their work and especially grateful for the eight included contributions by 18 authors from seven countries (Canada, China, Denmark, Germany, Greece, Norway, and the United States). These international contributions are a fitting reflection of IJSC's global scope. Specifically, the articles are on the subjects of journalism in the age of social media, social-media content management, brand-image communication, crisis communication and image repair through social media, and social-media-based anti-sponsor-brand communities.

Abeza is with Dept. of Kinesiology, Towson University, Towson, MD. O'Reilly is with the College of Business and Economics, University of Guelph, Guelph, ON, Canada. Seguin is with the School of Human Kinetics, University of Ottawa, Ottawa, ON, Canada. Abeza (gabeza@towson.edu) is corresponding author.
