

A movie poster for 'The King of Kings'. On the left, a young boy with brown, wavy hair and large, expressive blue eyes looks up with a surprised expression. A small, fluffy blue cat with large eyes is perched on his shoulder. The background is dark and atmospheric, with a crowd of people in period clothing visible in the shadows. On the right, the title 'THE KING OF KINGS' is written in large, golden, three-dimensional serif letters. The word 'OF' is smaller and positioned between two horizontal lines. A small, golden figure of a king in a long robe stands on the right side of the title.

CHAPTER VII Canterbury pilgrims mediaeval and modern Inn dinners in Kent and in Dorsetshire A Boughton Boniface on agricultural depression The story of the Bossenden Wood tragedy as related by an eye witness View from Boughton Hill Bossenden Wood About an hour after noon we reached the village of Boughton where the servant of Chaucer s rich canon the alchemist who could have paved with gold all the road to Canterbury town overtook the pilgrims bound to the shrine of Thomas Becket We too had our faces Canterbury ward and a remark upon the association of the locality with the pilgrimage described by the mediaeval poet with so much quaintness and humour led to many comparisons and contrasts more or less felicitous as we strolled through the village looking for what might seem to be the most eligible hostelry Having made our selection we sat down in the sanded parlour which the curate said reminded him by its furniture and decorations of The Leather Bottle at Cobham and awaited the serving of dinner with appetites sharpened by our long walk and the pure air There are certain features of the public rooms of village inns in the south of England which are common to most of them the same hard chairs the same stuffed birds in the same square cases the same varnished engravings in the same black frames may be found in a very large proportion of the guest parlours of hostelryes of this class In how many as I asked the curate should we not find that old print of The Stopper stopped representing a rustic going through the woods on the eve of a fox
