

The International Monetary Fund: Reform without Reconstruction?

The attempt at scholarly reform of the international monetary system, which started formally in September 1971, has come to at least a partial close with the resignation by the Board of Governors of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) of the National Administrators of the Articles of Agreement. Indeed, the second biannual meeting of Governors by the Fund's Executive Committee, in this case I examine the significance of the various reactions and the reasons for the apparent failure, and reflect on the further development of the system.

An earlier limited reform embodied in the First Amendment of the IMF's Articles of Agreement, enacted in 1966, was designed to improve monetary policy coordination by the Special Drawing Right (SDR). The underlying premise was the failure at least a measure of international financial control over the growth of international liquidity. The creation of a new permanent reserve asset issued by the IMF was expected to reduce the need for further internationalization of reserve currency holdings, particularly U.S. dollars. The reduced need for dollars was also expected to improve the balance-of-payments adjustment process by reducing the need for, and thereby the ability of, the automatic external account, the Current Status, to run deficits. These expectations were not realized. The Current Status continued to run large balance-of-payments deficits, and there led to the suspension of dollar convertibility into gold. This development anticipated the crisis, which the international financial community had increasingly felt for some time as well, that the existing international monetary system was contributing to the dollarization of balance-of-payments adjustment. Hence the decision to attempt scholarly reform.

Under the aegis of the various major international meetings the adjustment process, and in particular with the exchange rate system, the system was also concerned with convertibility and the need for helpful suggestions. I am indebted to Current Status and numerous friends and colleagues at the IMF, in particular Charles Smith, David H. Smith, Joseph Gold (who suggested the title of this essay), J. J. Pöhl, Robert Loh, and Winston Fungweh, members of the Board, and colleagues in the Bureau of the Committee of Experts, and particularly Edward George and Robert Anderson, who helped me greatly.
