

Social Work Interviews

Congratulations. If you received a call for a job interview that means your resume got your foot in the door. The interview is important for two reasons: 1) this is your chance to convince the agency that you are the best social worker for the job; 2) this is the time to learn more about whether the agency and position are a good fit for you.

Here are ten tips to help you stand out from the pack and make a good choice for your career.

1 DO YOUR PREP WORK.

- Ask peers, professors, and colleagues if they have any direct experience with the agency or know someone who does. Through a direct resource, you can get to know the kind of person that does well there and let them know of your sincere interest.
- Use the website to better understand the work and the mission of the agency. Who do they serve? Whom do they partner with in the community? Are people on their management team social workers? Identify specific questions about the work that you can ask in the interview; this will show your investment.
- From the website or a contact, you might recognize someone you know or find that you are the alumni from the same school. It shows you've done your homework if you can say to the person who interviews you, "I saw you attended UCLA School of Social Welfare; how did you like the program?"
- Make sure to contact your references to let them know you are applying for the job and ask them if they are still comfortable giving you a reference. You should also email them a description of the job before they are called to give a reference.

2 BE FRIENDLY AND INTERESTED.

- You're not just being hired to do a job, you are also joining a team. Use your social work relationship-building skills from the time you're first called and in the interview itself.
- Learn people's names. Even the person at the front desk. You never know who is going to have the ear of the person who hires. When you meet people, ask them their names and what they are responsible for at the agency. Make sure to repeat their name at least one time, even if it is to say, "It was so great to meet you, Donna."

3 DRESS PROFESSIONALLY.

- Even if the job you're interviewing for or the agency itself is casual, showing up for the interview looking professional shows you're taking the interview seriously.
- Business casual is your best bet. This means nice slacks and a button down shirt. Wear something you would wear in the job you are going to do. People make the mistake of being too dressy. Women—avoid low cut tops or skirts
