Studies on Philippine Labor Institute of Labor and Manpower Studies, 1985* Filipino Studies Martin F. Manalansan, Augusto Espiritu, 2016-05-10 After years of occupying a vexed position in the American academy Philippine studies has come into its own emerging as a trenchant and dynamic space of inquiry Filipino Studies is a field defining collection of vibrant voices critical perspectives and provocative ideas about the cultural political and economic state of the Philippines and its diaspora Traversing issues of colonialism neoliberalism globalization and nationalism this volume examines not only the past and present position of the Philippines and its people but also advances new frameworks for re conceptualizing this growing field Written by a prestigious lineup of international scholars grappling with the legacies of colonialism and imperial power the essays examine both the genealogy of the Philippines hyphenated identity as well as the future trajectory of the field Hailing from multiple disciplines in the humanities and social sciences the contributors revisit and contest traditional renditions of Philippine colonial histories from racial formations and the Japanese occupation to the Cold War and independence from the United States Whether addressing the contested memories of World War II the voyage of Filipino men and women into the U S metropole or migrant labor and the notion of home the assembled essays tease out the links between the past and present with a hopeful longing for various futures Filipino Studies makes bold declarations about the productive frameworks that open up new archives and innovative landscapes of knowledge for Filipino and Filipino American Studies

Developing Socioemotional Skills for the Philippines' Labor Market Pablo Acosta, Takiko Igarashi, Rosechin Olfindo, Jan Rutkowski, 2017-10-05 While the Philippines has achieved remarkable progress in raising the education level of its labor force the standard proxy for educational attainment years of formal schooling is increasingly inadequate as a measure of workforce skills About one third of employers report being unable to fill vacancies due to lack of applicants with the requisite skills Most of these missing skills are socioemotional skills also known as non cognitive skills soft skills or behavioral skills Emerging international evidence suggests that socioemotional skills are increasingly crucial to the types of jobs being created by the global economy The following study presents new evidence from employer and household surveys on the role of socioemotional skills in the Philippine labor market The analysis reveals that Two thirds of employers report difficulty in finding workers with adequate work ethics or appropriate interpersonal and communications skills Firm based training increasingly focuses on socioemotional skills The more educated and employed workers tend to score higher on measures of grit decision making agreeableness and extroversion Socioemotional skills are associated with an increase in average daily earnings in particular for women young workers less educated workers and those employed in the service sector Higher levels of socioemotional skills are also correlated with a greater probability of being employed having completed secondary education and pursuing tertiary education Studies suggest that primary school is the optimal age for shaping socioemotional skills but the Philippines elementary education curriculum devotes limited resources to their development Schools continue to be judged solely by students performance in cognitive achievement tests but not on soft skills competencies and teachers are not appropriately trained to foster the development of them Finally interventions targeting workers entering the labor force can also effectively bolster their socioemotional skills complementing effects to improve labor market information and vocational counseling
