

Taste & Smell

Taste & smell

Most of our special senses are chemoreception systems: gustation (taste) and olfaction (smell). The degree to which we respond to taste or smell is determined by the nature of the stimulus and the nature of the receptors. The degree to which we respond to taste or smell is determined by the nature of the stimulus and the nature of the receptors. The degree to which we respond to taste or smell is determined by the nature of the stimulus and the nature of the receptors.

Concentrations

Taste receptors vary depending on the concentration of the substance in a given solution or food. For low concentrations, taste is weak and salty substances may taste pleasant.

Gustation

Gustation, the sense of taste, gives us information about the food and drink that we consume. Taste buds on the primary gustatory organ, the tongue, contain chemoreceptors called gustatory cells. These taste buds have four basic components: sweet, sour, bitter and salty. A fifth taste, umami, is also present in some foods.

The taste bud

Taste buds, structures that produce taste, have taste receptor molecules on the surface of the tongue. The resulting receptor potential travels to the brain via the gustatory nerve, where the signal is processed. The resulting receptor potential travels to the brain via the gustatory nerve, where the signal is processed.

Olfaction

The sense of smell is called olfaction, or the detection of odors. Olfaction depends on specialized chemical receptors, or chemoreceptors, located within the olfactory epithelium. These receptors are designed to respond to small amounts of an odorant, a molecule that can be smelled. The brain integrates the input from several different receptors to identify a particular odor. Humans can detect about 10,000 odors.

As air flows through the nose, the odors across the nasal cavity pass through the olfactory epithelium, bringing odorant molecules into contact with the olfactory neurons. Binding increases the ability to detect odors by increasing the volume of air inhaled, which can increase the number of receptors.

Olfactory receptors

Olfactory receptors

Olfaction depends on the olfactory epithelium, which is located in the upper part of the nasal cavity. The olfactory epithelium is a specialized tissue that contains olfactory neurons. These neurons are designed to respond to small amounts of an odorant, a molecule that can be smelled. The brain integrates the input from several different receptors to identify a particular odor.

Compound sweet and salty tastes, we are left with sour tastes, which are bitter. Sour tastes are the most common taste. Sour tastes are the most common taste. Sour tastes are the most common taste. Sour tastes are the most common taste.

The synapse

Neurons communicate with other cells at a synapse, the site of a nerve impulse transmission. The space between the presynaptic, or sending, neuron and the postsynaptic, or receiving, cell is called the synaptic cleft. An impulse enters at the tip of the axon, the terminal button, where "messenger" molecules called neurotransmitters. These highly specialized chemicals carry nerve impulses from the presynaptic cell to the postsynaptic cell, where they bind to receptors on the postsynaptic cell, which then triggers an action potential in the target cell.
