

Measuring the components of catchment hydrology

- Historically, catchment studies adopted a water balance approach
 - $P = Q + E + I + \Delta (M, G, S)$
P is precipitation, Q river discharge, E evapotranspiration, I interception, M soil water storage, G groundwater storage and S is channel and surface water storage
 - Seasonal variations in the balance control seasonal patterns in river flow
- However - simple input/output ratio does not explain processes
 - Need to evaluate the role of runoff production processes in generating river flow
