

What is Geophysics?

Geophysics is the scientific study of the Earth using non-invasive physical methods such as magnetism, gravity, seismic waves, and electrical currents.

Instead of drilling or digging, geophysicists measure variations in the Earth's physical properties to reveal what lies beneath the surface.

These techniques allow us to map hidden structures like underground rock formations, mineral deposits, groundwater, and fault lines—helping industries such as mining, construction, and environmental science make informed decisions.
