

Introduction to Plants

Plants are multicellular eukaryotic organisms with the ability to produce their own food by the process of photosynthesis. (They are autotrophs.) Algae have historically been included with the plants, but they are now classified with the protists. The modern definition of plants includes organisms that live primarily on land (and sometimes in water), excluding algae that live primarily in water.

Another distinguishing characteristic of plants is their type of chloroplast. Chloroplasts are used to store energy from the sun during the process of photosynthesis. They have a structure called a thylakoid. In most other species of algae the sun's energy is stored in these structures, but in plants the sun's energy is stored in the chloroplasts.

Plants are divided into three groups: nonvascular plants and vascular plants. Nonvascular plants are simple, unbranched plants that live in moist areas. Vascular plants are more complex plants. They have a vascular system that transports water and nutrients throughout the plant. There are three main groups of vascular plants: the seedless vascular plants, the angiosperms, and the gymnosperms. The seedless vascular plants are the simplest, and the gymnosperms are the most complex. The angiosperms are the most complex, and the gymnosperms are the simplest.

The life cycle of plants has three main stages: vegetative, reproductive, and senescent. Vegetative plants are the simplest, and they live for a long time. Reproductive plants are more complex, and they live for a shorter time. Senescent plants are the most complex, and they live for a very short time.

The reproductive processes of plants are the germination process and the pollination process. Germination is the process by which a seed grows into a new plant. Pollination is the process by which a plant's reproductive organs are fertilized. The germination process is the first stage of a plant's life cycle, and the pollination process is the second stage. The third stage is the senescent process, which is the final stage of a plant's life cycle.

Plants produce their own food by the process of photosynthesis. In the vegetative stage, the plant uses the sun's energy to produce food. In the reproductive stage, the plant uses the sun's energy to produce food. In the senescent stage, the plant uses the sun's energy to produce food. The vegetative stage is the simplest, and the reproductive stage is the most complex. The senescent stage is the final stage of a plant's life cycle.
