Teaching Music In The Twenty First Century:

Teaching Music in the Twenty-first Century Lois Choksy, 2001 For any undergraduate graduate level course in Music Education Unique in both content and approach this text offers a single volume authoritative comparison of the four most popular music education methods used in North America Jacques Dalcroze Kodaly Orff and Comprehensive Musicianship Its in depth examination of the methods and underlying philosophies of each method and its suggested lessons for each method at each grade level will help students make educated curricular choices among methods

Higher Education in Music in the Twenty-First Century Björn Heile, Eva Moreda Rodriguez, Jane Stanley, 2017-11-22 In this book the contributors reconsider the fundamentals of Music as a university discipline by engaging with the questions What should university study of music consist of Are there any aspects repertoires pieces composers and musicians that we want all students to know about Are there any skills that we expect them to be able to master How can we guarantee the relevance rigour and cohesiveness of our curriculum What is specific to higher education in music and what does it mean now and for the future The book addresses many of the challenges students and teachers face in current higher education indeed the majority of today's music students undoubtedly encounter a greater diversity of musical traditions and critical approaches to their study as well as a wider set of skills than their forebears Welcome as these developments may be they pose some risks too more material cannot be added to the curriculum without either sacrificing depth for breadth or making much of it optional The former provides students with a superficial and deceptive familiarity with a wide range of subject matter but without the analytical skills and intellectual discipline required to truly master any of it The latter easily results in a fragmentation of knowledge and skills without a realistic opportunity for students to draw meaningful connections and arrive at a synthesis The authors Music academics from the University of Glasgow provide case studies from their own extensive experience which are complemented by an Afterword from Nicholas Cook 1684 Professor of Music at the University of Cambridge Together they examine what students can and should learn about and from music and what skills and knowledge music graduates could or should possess in order to operate successfully in professional and public life Coupled with these considerations are reflections on music's social function and universities role in public life concluding with the conviction that a university education in music is more than a personal investment in one's future it contributes to the public good

Higher Education in Music in the Twenty-First Century Senior Lecturer in Music Björn Heile, Jane Stanley, Eva Moreda Rodriguez, 2019-12-12 In this book the contributors reconsider the fundamentals of Music as a university discipline by engaging with the questions What should university study of music consist of Are there any aspects repertoires pieces composers and musicians that we want all students to know about Are there any skills that we expect them to be able to master How can we guarantee the relevance rigour and cohesiveness of our curriculum What is specific to higher education in music and what does it mean now and for the future The book addresses many of the challenges students and teachers face in current higher education indeed the majority of today's music students undoubtedly encounter a greater diversity of musical traditions and critical approaches to their study as well as a wider set of skills than their forebears. Welcome as these developments may be they pose some risks too. More material cannot be added to the curriculum without either sacrificing depth for breadth or making much of it optional. The former provides students with a superficial and deceptive familiarity with a wide range of subject matter but without the analytical skills and intellectual discipline required to truly master any of it. The latter easily results in a fragmentation of knowledge and skills without a realistic opportunity for students to draw meaningful connections and arrive at a synthesis. The authors, Music academics from the University of Glasgow, provide case studies from their own extensive experience which are complemented by an Afterword from Nicholas Cook, 1984 Professor of Music at the University of Cambridge. Together they examine what students can and should learn about and from music and what skills and knowledge music graduates could or should possess in order to operate successfully in professional and public life. Coupled with these considerations are reflections on music's social function and universities' role in public life, concluding with the co-

Globalization, Nationalism, and Music Education in the Twenty-First Century in Greater China Wai-Chung Ho, 2025-10-01. Globalization, Nationalism and Music Education in the Twenty-First Century in Greater China examines the recent developments in school education and music education in Greater China Mainland China, Hong Kong and Taiwan and the relationship between and integration of national cultural identity and globalization in their respective school curriculums. Regardless of their common history and cultural backgrounds, in recent decades these localities have experienced divergent political, cultural and educational structures. Through an analysis of the literature, official curriculum documents, approved music textbooks and a survey questionnaire and in-depth interviews with music teachers, this book also examines the ways in which policies for national identity formation and globalization interact to complement and contradict each other in the context of music education in respect to national and cultural values in the three territories. Wai Chung Ho's substantive research interests include the sociology of music, China's education system and the comparative study of East Asian music education. Her research focuses on education and development with an emphasis on the impact of the interplay between globalization, nationalization and localization on cultural development and school music education.
