Speech Production And Speech Modelling:

Speech Production and Speech Modelling W.J. Hardcastle, Alain Marchal, 1990-06-30 Speech sound production is one of the most complex human activities it is also one of the least well understood This is perhaps not altogether surprising as many of the complex neurological and physiological processes involved in the generation and execution of a speech utterance remain relatively inaccessible to direct investigation and must be inferred from careful scrutiny of the output of the system from details of the movements of the speech organs themselves and the acoustic consequences of such movements Such investigation of the speech output have received considerable impetus during the last decade from major technological advancements in computer science and biological transducing making it possible now to obtain large quantities of quantitative data on many aspects of speech articulation and acoustics relatively easily Keeping pace with these advancements in laboratory techniques have been developments in theoretical modelling of the speech production process There are now a wide variety of different models available reflecting the different disciplines involved linguistics speech science and technology engineering and acoustics The time seems ripe to attempt a synthesis of these different models and theories and thus provide a common forum for discussion of the complex problem of speech production Such an activity would seem particularly timely also for those colleagues in speech technology seeking better more accurate phonetic models as components in their speech synthesis and automatic speech recognition systems Speech Production and Speech

Modelling NATO Advanced Study Institute on Speech Production and Speech Modelling, 1990 Speech Production & Speech Modelling ,1990 Speech Production Jonathan Harrington, Marija Tabain, 2013-05-13 Speech Production Models Phonetic Processes and Techniques brings together researchers from many different disciplines computer science dentistry engineering linguistics phonetics physiology psychology all with a special interest in how speech is produced From the initial neural program to the end acoustic signal it provides an overview of several dominant models in the speech production literature as well as up to date accounts of persistent theoretical issues in the area A particular focus is on the evaluation of information gleaned from instrumental investigations of the speech production process including MRI PET ultra sound video imaging EMA EPG X ray computer simulation and many others The research presented in this volume considers questions such as the feed back vs feed forward control of speech the acoustic auditory vs articulatory somato sensory domains of speech planning the innateness of human speech the possible architecture of a speech production model and the realization of prosodic structure in speech Leaders in speech research from around the world have contributed their most recent work to this volume Speech Production and Speech Modelling W.J. Hardcastle, Alain Marchal, 2012-12-06 Speech sound production is one of the most complex human activities it is also one of the least well understood This is perhaps not altogether surprising as many of the complex neurological and physiological processes involved in the generation and execution of a speech utterance remain relatively inaccessible to direct investigation and must be inferred from careful scrutiny of the output of the system from details of the movements of the speech organs themselves and the acoustic consequences of such movements. Such investigation of the speech output has received considerable impetus during the last decade from major technological advancements in computer science and biological transducing making it possible now to obtain large quantities of quantitative data on many aspects of speech articulation and acoustics relatively easily. Keeping pace with these advancements in laboratory techniques have been developments in theoretical modelling of the speech production process. There are now a wide variety of different models available reflecting the different disciplines involved: linguistics, speech science and technology, engineering and acoustics. The time seems ripe to attempt a synthesis of these different models and theories and thus provide a common forum for discussion of the complex problem of speech production. Such an activity would seem particularly timely also for those colleagues in speech technology seeking better, more accurate phonetic models as components in their speech synthesis and automatic speech recognition systems.

Models and Theories of Speech Production Adamantios Gafos, Pascal van Lieshout, 2020-08-07

Developments in Speech Synthesis Mark Tatham, Katherine Morton, 2005-10-31

With a growing need for understanding the process involved in producing and perceiving spoken language, this timely publication answers these questions in an accessible reference. Containing material resulting from many years' teaching and research, Speech Synthesis provides a complete account of the theory of speech. By bringing together the common goals and methods of speech synthesis into a single resource, the book will lead the way towards a comprehensive view of the process involved in human speech. The book includes applications in speech technology and speech synthesis. It is ideal for intermediate students of linguistics and phonetics who wish to proceed further, as well as researchers and engineers in telecommunications working in speech technology and speech synthesis who need a comprehensive overview of the field and who wish to gain an understanding of the objectives and achievements of the study of speech production and perception.

Speech Production and Perception Mark Tatham, Katherine Morton, 2016-01-13

This book aims to develop a framework for a fully explanatory theory of speech production and speech perception. It emphasises the difference between static models (primarily descriptive) and dynamic models that attempt to show how the basic linguistics and phonetics are related in an actual human speaker-listener.

Proceedings of the 5th Seminar on Speech Production, 2000

Expression in Speech Mark Tatham, Katherine Morton, 2003-10-16

This book is about the nature of expression in speech. It is a comprehensive exploration of how such expression is produced and understood and of how the emotional content of spoken words may be analysed, modelled, tested and synthesized. Listeners can interpret tone of voice, assess emotional pitch and effortlessly detect the finest modulations of speaker attitude, yet these processes present almost intractable difficulties to the researchers seeking to identify and understand them. In seeking to explain the production and perception of emotive content, Mark Tatham and Katherine Morton review the potential of biological and cognitive models. They examine how the features that make up the speech production and perception systems have been studied by biologists.

psychologists and linguists and assess how far biological behavioural and linguistic models generate hypotheses that provide insights into the nature of expressive speech The authors use recent techniques in speech synthesis and automatic speech recognition as a test bed for models of expression in speech Acknowledging that such testing presupposes a comprehensive computational model of speech production they put forward original proposals for its foundations and show how the relevant data structures may be modelled within its framework This pioneering book will be of central interest to researchers in linguistics and in speech science pathology and technology It will also be valuable for behavioural and cognitive scientists wanting to know more about this vital and elusive aspect of human behaviour
