Feasibility of Reintroducing Spring Peepers (Pseudacris Crucifer) to Their Historic Range Susan F. Lawrence, 2018 The Spring Peeper Pseudacris crucifer is a small treefrog found throughout the eastern United States and southeastern Canada Although locally common in southern Illinois Spring Peeper populations are highly fragmented in northeastern Illinois because of habitat loss and degradation Reintroduction of Spring Peepers to historic sites in northeastern Illinois could help retain genetic variation and ensure a stochastic event does not eliminate these populations The goal of this study was to evaluate the feasibility of reintroduction by 1 determining the population viability of Spring Peepers at a potential source site 2 testing for amphibian pathogen presence at source and recipient sites and 3 measuring abiotic and biotic pond parameters at sites with and without Spring Peepers To determine population viability at a representative source pond a baseline population viability analysis PVA model was constructed using demographic parameter estimates from published literature and clutch size and tadpole survival rates measured experimentally Clutch size averaged 239 range 90 541 n 6 and tadpole survival differed significantly among ponds and between years and ranged from 9 93% Variations on the baseline model were used to evaluate the effect of harvest on a source population and the potential fate of a reintroduced population Results showed that harvesting 100 tadpoles 500 tadpoles or 100 two year old adults for four consecutive years for reintroduction would have little effect on the potential source population Furthermore the reintroduction of 100 tadpoles 500 tadpoles or 100 two year old adults yearly for four years at a potential recipient site would potentially result in a self sustaining population Batrachochytrium dendrobatidis Bd was detected in Spring Peepers at a potential source site and in other anuran species at a potential reintroduction site Bd was not detected in recently metamorphosed Spring Peeper froglets Abiotic and biotic pond characteristics were compared at 19 sites throughout five counties in northeastern Illinois ten sites with Spring Peepers and nine sites without Spring Peepers for a total of 48 ponds Pond size depth pH and dissolved oxygen did not differ between sites with and without Spring Peepers in spring or summer Specific conductance canopy openness and emergent vegetation did not differ between sites with and without Spring Peepers in spring but were all significantly higher at sites with Spring Peepers in summer Recent management efforts at the potential reintroduction site have increased canopy openness and may promote growth of emergent vegetation Together my results suggest that reintroduction may be feasible for Spring Peepers
