Abstract

Full-body gestures play a pivotal role in natural interactions and are crucial for achieving effective communication. Nevertheless, most existing studies primarily focus on the gesture generation of speakers, overlooking the vital role of listeners in the interaction process and failing to fully explore the dynamic interaction between them. This paper innovatively proposes an Inter-Diffusion Generation Model of Speakers and Listeners for Effective Communication. For the first time, we integrate the full-body gestures of listeners into the generation framework. By devising a novel inter-diffusion mechanism, this model can accurately capture the complex interaction patterns between speakers and listeners during communication. In the model construction process, based on the advanced diffusion model architecture, we innovatively introduce interaction conditions and the GAN model to increase the denoising step size. As a result, when generating gesture sequences, the model can not only dynamically generate based on the speaker's speech information but also respond in realtime to the listener's feedback, enabling synergistic interaction between the two. Abundant experimental results demonstrate that compared with the current state-of-the-art gesture generation methods, the model we proposed has achieved remarkable improvements in the naturalness, coherence, and speech-gesture synchronization of the generated gestures. In the subjective evaluation experiments, users highly praised the generated interaction scenarios, believing that they are closer to real life human communication situations. Objective index evaluations also show that our model outperforms the baseline methods in multiple key indicators, providing more powerful support for effective communication.

1 Introduction

In the vast and evolving landscape of human communication research, the generation of natural looking body gestures has been a long standing and challenging pursuit, particularly in the burgeoning fields of virtual reality, gaming, and filmmaking. These non-verbal cues are far more than just supplementary elements; they are the lifeblood of immersive and realistic interactions. By seamlessly integrating with spoken language, body gestures can convey a wealth of information, including emotions, attitudes, and intentions, thereby enriching the overall communication experience.

Speakers The Role Of Listeners:

Speakers, Listeners and Communication Gillian Brown, 1995 In this book Gillian Brown draws on a wide range of examples of discourse analysis to explore the ways in which speakers and listeners use language collaboratively to talk about what they can see in front of them and about a series of events She examines the conditions under which communication is successful and the conditions under which it sometimes fails The focus of her attention is upon the listener's role as the listener tries to make sense of what the speaker says in a highly constrained context her cognitive pragmatic approach to discourse analysis both complements and challenges the sociological anthropological perspectives on the subject which currently predominate Gillian Brown is co author of the well known textbook Discourse Analysis Cambridge University Press 1983
