their charges become self-reliant. GP is helping another person become competent by providing expertise working alongside the learner. For the nurse specifically, this means educating and working alongside parents and children within an environment that supports health. Consistent with client and family-centered practice, this fresh approach to nurse-client teaching is drawn from a broad span of disciplines including education, social and cultural anthropology, relationship-based attachment, caregiving theory, and developmental science. Written for students and practitioners who wish to incorporate GP into their practice and for managers, administrators, and policy makers who support its implementation, this resource demonstrates the value of GP as a new and emerging health care model that integrates care across health care settings. The text describes step-by-step how to practice GP, discusses support systems to maintain GP past the initial treatment, and includes abundant case studies, examples, and research findings. Chapters analyze how GP can promote health, prevent acute and chronic illness, and adjust old patterns of living and behaviors.
